

Crafts Urges Disputes Be Restricted to AIM

William B. Crafts, assistant to the dean men, last night suggested to the Association of Independent Men's Board of Governors that in the future, if any group within AIM disagrees on any subject, that subject should be aired in the Board of Governors meeting.

Crafts had reference to the letter to the editor published in the Daily Collegian last week, signed by several members of the Board of Governors, which criticized the AIM Judicial Board of Review for using the camping of dormitory residents as a means of punishment for misconduct in the dormitories.

Crafts said that he thought that the matter should be discussed at an AIM meeting rather than be hashed out in a newspaper. Bruce Lieske, AIM president, said that he would arrange for David Sullivan, chairman of the judicial board, to be present at the next AIM meeting to answer questions pertaining to the workings of the board.

Nelson Seidel, chairman of the AIM projects committee, reported that his committee had taken a survey of freshmen over 21 and found that allowing these students to have cars on campus would add approximately 175 more cars to the campus. Seidel said that at present there are about 4300 cars registered and that campus parking facilities afford 3000 parking spaces.

Seidel said that his committee is presently looking into the matter of constructing additional cinder parking lots to alleviate the parking situation until the administration's plans for the construction of permanent lots can be finished.

The board voted to have the matter of the Collegian circulation submitted to All-University Cabinet through Lieske. It was pointed out that the present system, which is one Collegian for every two students, is inadequate since a great many students do not get a chance to pick up Collegians.

James Goodwin, Town Independent Men representative, said that he felt that presently the town students don't receive a supply of Collegians in keeping with the number of students living in town. He suggested the possibility of having more Collegians printed. It was pointed out that Collegian is working on a limited budget, received from a student fee of $1.25 per semester, and might not be able to carry the financial load of having more papers printed. Harry Martini, AIM treasurer, produced figures which showed the profit, if any, that each student activity showed during the past year. Through this, Martini implied that the Collegian could without much difficulty have more papers printed.

AIM approved the appointment of Harold Dean as AIM social chairman. Approved as assistants to Dean were William Norman, publicity; Leonard Phillips, decoration; and James McDowell, arrangements.

The approval of Dean ran into a snag when David Faust, secretary of West Halls Council, protested to the appointment by reading a prepared statement which said that Dean's unpopularity on campus would hinder his work as social chairman. Faust said this statement did not reflect his personal opinion but was the opinion of certain students within the West Halls Council who asked him to read the statement at the AIM meeting.

Lieske ruled, however, that bringing personalities into an executive meeting was out of order.

ROTC Adds Link Trainer To Program

A link trainer—a mechanism constructed internally to resemble a typical aircraft cockpit—has been added to the Air Force Reserve Officers' Training Corps program.

The link trainer contains all of the essential instruments needed to conduct an instrument flight. Air Force ROTC cadets and area Civil Air Patrol personnel will receive training on the new mechanism.

Various operations—such as changes in flight altitude and changes in direction—are possible with the link trainer.

When in operation, the trainer prevents the operator from obtaining any outside references. The trainer allows a simulated flight, using instruments alone, to be conducted.

A two-way communication system enables the operator to talk to an instructor outside the mechanism. The instructor has a duplicate set of instruments at a recording station so that he can keep track of the operator's progress.

The link trainer is used extensively throughout the Air Force to train pilots in instrument flying procedures, ROTC officials explained.

MAKE YOUR PITCH BY WIRE!

- Psychology majors will be thoroughly familiar with the principle: "If she's worth dating, she's worth wiring."
- Others, however, may need reminding of the psychological fact that absolutely no one can resist the impact of a telegram.
- The application of the principle to Dating is obvious: let others be disappointed because of their dated dating methods. ... YOU flash her a glowing request for a date by wire.

(Note: the same principle can be applied to arranging for job interviews with V.I.P.'s and cash advances from home.)
