Paint Publicity

Some of the students who won't be applauded on Beaver Field tomorrow have been trying all week to get their names in the paper for outstanding performances in the field of defacing campuses.

These are the students who are going all out to prove they reek of the same spirit that went out of style in the twenties along with the raccoon coat and the gold fish diet.

These are the students that off-campus newspaper readers consider typical—typical of the educated man, the intelligent youth, the future "leader."

These are also the students who claim credit for regulating a lot of college traditions—for ending harmless freshman-sophomore wars, for restricting friendly intercollegiate "rivalry."

They're the ones, paint bucket in hand, that disgust fun-loving non-sissy students who have used college influence as a short-cut to maturity and not as an excuse for law-breaking.

They've been around for a long time but they probably won't disappear until college fun is a thing of the past and football's only audience is sitting in front of a television set. —Jackie Hudgins

Safety Valve...

Bad Dance Trends Do Exist

TO THE EDITOR: How is it possible for anyone to learn to folk dance without first "walking through the figure" and then doing the dance. The level of dancing on this campus rarely reaches the intermediate, to say nothing of the advanced, level—as David Houghton stated bad trends do exist on this campus in folk dancing.

The students rarely know the preparation that has been performed this semester, as in the past, to make folk dancing more enjoyable while advanced to a higher level.

In closing, to the best of my knowledge there is no such recognized group that Mr. Huth refers to as the "newly organized Interlandia Folk Dancers" as of this date.

Let's Rehearse for Tomorrow

TO THE EDITOR: Tonight at the pep rally we want a preview of what you're going to do at tomorrow's game.

What we mean is we want to hear you cheer. We don't want to play catch with oranges or be snowed with tissue paper.

Pitt can be the biggest game of the year. Let's make it the best.

Drama Groups Given Portrait

Mrs. Esther H. Cloetingh, widow of Arthur C. Cloetingh, former head of the dramatics department, has presented an oil portrait of her husband, professor of dramatics from 1919 until his death in 1954, to the division of dramatics and to Players.

The painting will hang in the dramatics division's meeting room in Schwab Auditorium. The portrait was painted by Mrs. Jean Woodruff Francis, of New York, a graduate of the University and former student of Mr. Cloetingh.

Dr. Walter H. Walters, assistant professor of dramatics and acting head of the division of dramatics, accepted the portrait.

'News and Views' To Be Sold Today

Several changes have been made in "News and Views," home economics publication, which is on sale today for twenty-five cents at the Hetzel Union desk, the Corner Room, and the bulletin board on the Mall.

The first edition for the fall semester contains 16 pages of offset printing instead of the traditional letter press. In addition, changes have been made to the cover of the "Trends in Fashion" edition.

Other features include a pictorial of seven pictures and two articles written by Janet Rodgers and Elizabeth Marvin on this year's fashion season for men and women.

A Chi O's, Kappa Sigs, Hold Toy Drive

The annual Christmas toy drive is being sponsored by Kappa Sigma fraternity and Alpha Chi Omega sorority.

Toys, given by townspeople and students, are cleaned, repaired, painted, and given to county welfare groups for distribution to needy children.

Last year 78 children received toys on Christmas morning through this program, officials said.

Persons wishing to contribute toys should call either the fraternity or sorority and the toys will be collected.

Hat Societies to Solicit For Olympics Saturday

Hat Society members will assist the local Junior Chamber of Commerce in soliciting funds for the 1956 Olympics at the Pittsburgh-Penn State football game Saturday.

This nationwide campaign, endorsed by Life magazine, is being carried on in cooperation with the country's Junior Chambers of Commerce.

Open Astronomy Meeting

The first open astronomy meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. Sunday in 217 Hetzel Union.

"What's New in Astronomy" will be the topic discussed.

The meeting, which is sponsored by Alpha Nu, astronomy honorary society, is open to the public.

Pierce to Visit ROTC Today

Maj. Gen. James R. Pierce, deputy commander of the United States 2nd Army, will visit the Army ROTC unit today, Col. Richard F. Reidy, professor of military science and tactics of the Army ROTC detachment, has announced.

The 2nd Army is the largest army in the United States. As Washington is within its jurisdiction, it is considered one of the most important armies.

General Pierce, in his capacity as deputy commander, conducts frequent inspection trips to units throughout the 2nd Army area.

Prior to his appointment to the United States Military Academy as a cadet, General Pierce attended the University.

Lab Anniversary Celebration Ends

About a thousand people visited the Ordnance Research Laboratory open house yesterday to celebrate the Laboratory's 10th anniversary.

The open house was the final event in the Laboratory's week long program. A convocation was held to dedicate the recently completed addition to the main Laboratory building. A program honoring ten year employees, and model displays demonstrating equipment in almost every division in the Laboratory were included in the celebration.

Little Man on Campus

By Bibler

"OK, men, the next play is DX-83—Now, Bolivar, when you hear me yell "four", I'll give you the ball, then you try to get through th' men wearin' the yellow sweaters and then head for th' posts painted purple and white."

Interpreting the News

Geneva Encourages Old Cold War

By J. M. ROBERTS

Associated Press News Analyst

One way you look at it, the Allies have escaped from Geneva after skating on some pretty thin ice.

They went there prepared to pay Russia handsomely, perhaps even dangerously, if she would really cooperate for peace.

There was danger in the Western offer to establish a security system leaving Germany free to choose her own course.

There was danger, as Molotov said, in the American offer of mutual inspection of military concentrations in order to insure against surprise attack.

A good many people have wondered if the President and his Secretary of State were not taking a calculated risk on that point, in order to impress the noncommitted peoples of the world of America's sincerity in seeking to avoid war. Russia was not expected to agree. If she had, the complications would have been terrific.

There was danger that the Eastern European satellites would find their positions frozen in a new security arrangement recognizing the entity of the Eastern military bloc which Russia formed in a show of balancing NATO.

It is better, then, that there were no agreements? That the pipe-dreams entertained by some since the death of Stalin have been shattered?

There is, of course, only a feeling of depression at the return to cold war. But for the health of the West, a full realization of the facts of life may be a life-saver.

Some of these facts are: The Soviet Union is a declared enemy of the West. It is an ideological as well as a political enemy. It is not subject to compromise as long as the promotion of world communism is Moscow's chief aim.

The Soviet Union will make no settlements except for her own purposes connected with this policy of expansion, and she will keep them, only as long as they serve those purposes.

The Soviet Union intends to promote her policy by means of disruption of Western affairs, as in her campaign to identify communism with the nationalist aspirations of underdeveloped, or what she calls "colonial" nations, and as in the case of her current attempt to infiltrate the Middle East.

The Soviet Union, in this campaign, is perfectly willing to promote wars between other peoples, as she did in Korea and as she is trying to do in the Middle East.
