

Snow, Grease Fail; Pitt Comes Through

A plot to slow two trains bearing University of Pittsburgh football fans to the University Saturday failed, but the trains arrived late anyway—due to the weather.

However, it was the steadily-falling snows and not some greased tracks that delayed the special trains about half an hour.

The two trains, carrying hundreds of Pitt fans, pulled into the State College terminal at 1:15 p.m.—15 minutes before the start of the traditional rivalry at Beaver Field.

They were the first passenger trains to roll into the terminal since President Dwight D. Eisenhower arrived by train in May, 1953.

A section of the Bellefonte Central track on the horseshoe curve near the Waddle grade was greased by pranksters, believed to be University students, sometime before the trains were scheduled to begin the trip.

When the grease was discovered on the rails in the morning, the track crews sanded them down. The first of the trains, powered by three Diesel engines, slipped a little when it crossed the stretch but maneuvered the grade. The second train had no trouble.

The snow, which had been falling nearly all night and morning, delayed the trains about half an hour.

Railroad patrols were sent out to check on the possibility of barricades placed along the tracks. It was also believed a section of the Pennsylvania Railroad track near Lemont had been greased; however, the trains never ran on this track.

Police reported that, with help from the snow, the Pitt fans on the trains were "orderly, and didn't give a bit of trouble."

Police Chief John R. Juba said there was no unusual noise or celebrating. "I understand from the policemen stationed on the train that the fans were well-behaved," he said.

The trains left State College after the game, which Pittsburgh won, 20-0, at 5 p.m. Saturday. The victor's football team made the return trip in a special car attached to the end of the second train.
