tions showed there to be no difference in performance of the various groups.
A University has a responsibility for undertaking experimental research on educational methods—particularly methods which will make it possible for the institution to serve more people, Greenhill said.

The University is considered as the pioneer in the closed-circuit television project. Several other schools are also following the University's leadership, namely, New York University and Stephens College.

Every week representatives from other schools come to the campus to investigate the new system. Over 2000 booklets, written by Carpenter and Greenhill, have been distributed upon request of schools.
Closed circuit TV is not a cure-all for all educational problems, Greenhill said, but it does appear to have possibilities for teaching large multiple section courses that should be studied in a cooperative and open-minded way.

is inconsistent and unreconcilable with the objectives and principles of political parties at Penn State. This policy is a definite obstruction to good student government and is one reason for the apathy and lack of participation of students in campus government."

NEWSPAPER WORK AS A CAREER

The 1st of 3 advertisements.

There are a number of first-rate newspapers.
Some are published in big cities, some in towns, and some are published in cities of middle size.
These first-rate newspapers have two things in common—they cannot be bought, and they cannot be intimidated.
They are not perfect.
Like even the best individuals, they have their faults and their frailties.
The philosophies back of these newspapers are varied.
Yet the philosophy back of one or another of them you are pretty sure to find more or less in accord with your own philosophy.
Such newspapers play an important role in American life.
The role is sometimes dangerous, sometimes romantic, sometimes prosaic, sometimes exciting, but at all times honorable and worthwhile.
Newspaper work is too unpredictable to be cut and dried.
Like all work it requires industry and an amount of routine drudgery.
But to alert minds, newspaper work offers endless possibilities of variety and of interest.
If you think of a newspaper career, teach yourself to keep your eyes open and your ears open.
Teach yourself to write clear, simple English.
A working knowledge of short-hand you will find a useful tool.
To speak and read a foreign language moderately well may sometimes prove to be a very great asset.
For the rest, read everything that interests you, but always read and think about what you read.
