

TV Classes Provide Student Training, Work

By JUDY HARKISON

The closed-circuit television project of the University, in addition to presenting classes to twice the number of students, provides training and part-time work for 24 undergraduates in camera operating, camera control work, and engineering, and for 23 graduate assistants in proctoring and instructing.

Four students are involved in each television class hour—two camera operators, one engineer, and one staff member.

Engineers average 12 hours of work a week, within a range of five to 25 hours. Camera operators put in approximately three hours, ranging from one to eight hours.

There are two separate closed-circuit systems, one in Sparks Building and one in Osmond Laboratory. The equipment in the complete system is worth $16,000, an is equivalent to approximately $75,000 worth of equipment in a commercial television studio.

The closed-circuit cameras are a different type from commercial ones, and are smaller and less easily damaged, in order to accommodate less experienced operators. The picture received on the classroom set is clearer than a home set because more detail is visible.

The students serve a trial period of four weeks, or 12 sessions. If they show dependability, interest, and an understanding of the work, they are accepted.

Engineers are Lloyd Matter, chief student engineer, James Raleigh, Robert Potts, Robert Horst, Roy McClaine, Robert Maslanski, and Dean Maurer.

There are two origination rooms in the Sparks system, room 10 and room 20. Room 20 is equipped with desks for 20 students, a piano, and background draperies. Only one class, Commerce 30, originates in room 10.

The project is being supported by the Ford Foundation Fund for the Advancement of Education. Last year $43,000 was given to the University, and this year $49,000.

Emory Richardson, graduate student in electrical engineering, is studying the possibilities of two-way microphones, and the distribution of signals between and within buildings.

Thomas Slettehaugh, graduate in art education, prepares all visual material for instructors to use in the TV classes.

'Young Friends' Sponsor Rockview Religious Programs

By PAT EVANS

The Young Friends Association is presenting a series of programs on Comparative Religion at the Rockview State Penitentiary.

The course on religion, which will continue until January, was begun as an experimental program. The lectures are given at 2 p.m. each Saturday at the prison.

Since each lecture has been attended by approximately 50 prisoners, the program will continue during the spring semester with a course on music appreciation, according to William Swartley, secretary of the Young Friends group.

Swartley said that volunteers are needed to assist in presenting the music course. Interested students should contact him. Because of a prison rule requiring all women visitors to be guarded, only men are participating in the program.

At present, the religion course is the only educational program offered to the prisoners.

"Judaism Today" is the subject of the lecture scheduled for tomorrow. It will be conducted by Clifford A. Nelson, associate professor of economics.

Next Saturday's program will be on "Christianity in the West." E. Hans Freund, associate professor of philosophy, will lecture.

The final program of the religion series will be presented Jan. 7 by Wirjawan Wirjosobijono, special student in psychology from Indonesia. His subject will be "Islam in Indonesia."

Male students who are interested in attending the programs at the prison should contact him, Swartley said.
