NEWSPAPER WORK AS A CAREER

The last of 3 advertisements.

A liberal arts education at a college or university of high scholastic standards is an excellent preparation for newspaper work as a career.

If you are sent to India or Italy, to Chile or Canada, as a foreign correspondent, you must be primarily an exceptionally able and down-to-earth reporter.

Yet your mental equipment should be such that you are at home with the knowledge of our best Foreign Service officers.

In addition, you should be able to listen intelligently and talk intelligently with important foreigners.

What holds true for an absolutely A-1 foreign correspondent differs little from what holds true for the A-1 Washington correspondent.

There are differences in kind, but not in degree.

And so it goes.

A great financial correspondent was a most scholarly man.

Maybe the second fact had a lot to do with the first fact.

An outstanding sports writer is related to an outstanding editorial writer in that both are great and both have toiled mightily to achieve greatness.

That is true of greatness all up and down the line—editor, music or dramatic critic, television critic or police reporter.

And always there are the intangibles.

Newspaper work as a career offers a grand view of life as it is.

You will find out you can get by with less, but you can get ahead with more.
