

Dulles Cites Administration's Thwarting of Red Advances

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13 (AP)—Secretary of State John Foster Dulles replied to critics today by reaffirming his claim that "brink of war" moves by the Eisenhower administration checked the Chinese Reds in Formosa, Indochina and Korea.

Dulles officially endorsed views to this effect which Life magazine attributed to him in an exclusive interview.

Dulles, after reading the full Life article, said through his press officer that remarks he is reported to have made in it "do not require correction from the standpoint of their substance."

These remarks by Dulles have aroused a storm of criticism from British newspapers as well as denunciations from Democratic Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) who termed them "a distortion of history."

Dean Acheson, former Democratic secretary of state, joined the foreign policy critics last night, cautioning against conducting foreign affairs by "hucksterism." Acheson did not mention the magazine article.

In the article, Dulles said that in order to block further Red aggression in Asia, the United States was "brought to the verge of war" three times in 18 months.

He said America's readiness to fight with atomic weapons if necessary was made known to the Chinese Reds. He credited this "strong action" with 1. ending the Korean War; 2. preventing the Chinese Reds from openly intervening with their armies in Indochina and 3. "finally" stopping the Reds' threatened invasion of Formosa.
