Borough Council Authorizes Work On Sewerage Line

State College Borough Council Monday night took the next step in connection with its sewerage expansion program by including the construction of a sewerage treatment plant.

The council authorized the consulting engineers, Morris Knowles, Inc. of Pittsburgh, to start the field work necessary to design lines for the new areas developed since the original plans were drawn up two years ago.

Members of council said they were in favor of competitive bidding rather than private negotiations to sell bonds for financing the $2,400,000 project.

The University, under a joint agreement, will construct and operate the sewerage plant and the borough will contribute toward the cost.

It is to be located near the duck pond, east of the borough.

AFROTC Decision Reversed

The Air Force has reversed a decision made last December to close more than 20 college Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps units.

Donald A. Quarles, Secretary of the Air Force, made the reversal after receiving protests from members of Congress and some of the colleges concerned.

The action was planned to affect those colleges producing insufficient R.O.T.C. graduates who could qualify for pilot instruction. The University would not have been affected by the plan.

Quarles made the reservation, however, that it might yet be necessary to close some of the units where output of pilot material is low after further evaluation of the program by the Air Force.

The Air Force has not disclosed the colleges that would have been shut down but other sources named Columbia University as one.

A Columbia spokesman said the Air Force R.O.T.C. program would probably be disbanded when the last of its members graduate in June, 1957.
