

Waring--

 future for the University. Waring continued. Many new buildings are going up, and more are planned, he said. What the University really needs now is a large auditorium. Waring added.

One of the greatest thrills Waring experienced when he returned to the campus yesterday was his initiation into Phi Mu Alpha, honorary music fraternity. However, Waring added, his hand was limp when he finally got through shaking hands with everyone.

Speaking about his program "Hear, Hear" last night, Waring said that too many people think his music is all "typed" and played in the same style over and over again. This is definitely not true, Waring said. "We are playing the same kind of music today that we were playing 40 years ago at Penn State. We have never made a change, the band has just gotten larger," he concluded.

 Another actor whose performance can be nearly included in this category of quality is Paul Talley, who portrayed Sir Epicure Mammon.

Beverly Barton, as Dol Common, was well cast as far as her physical appearance is concerned. For she looks like a London wench. She lends her best hand to the principals when she adorns the furniture as if she were in bed. Daniel Long, as Druggier, and Jim Jimirro, as Kastril, can be listed on the credit side.

On the other side of the ledger were, first, Alan Hill, who as Dapper, looked as if he was absent when stage directions were given, and consequently he slows up the movement. Bert Heffner, as Pertinax Surly, might also be listed in this class.

"The Alchemist" will make an entertaining evening for any theatergoer, and it will make a better evening if he watches Wilder as Face.
