

Carnival Committee Sets $50 Maximum for Booths

A $50 limit on cost of booth construction is one of the new carnival regulations decided by the Spring Week Committee Sunday.

Each organization entering the carnival will be asked to keep receipts and an itemized list of expenses. The committee set up the plan as a precautionary measure to be sure that the rule is followed.

Each group entering the carnival will be charged a $20 deposit. This deposit will be returned after the booth area is cleaned up. The deadline has been set for midnight. Last year's deadline was 12:30 a.m.

Maximum Ticket Points
The committee also voted to set 2000 as the maximum number of tickets for which points will be given. Any group that turns in 2000 tickets will receive 100 carnival points. Tickets above that number will not gain additional points for the group.

Last year the total number of tickets that could gain points for the group was 3000. The number was reduced this year because there will only be one night for the carnival, instead of two as in past years. Members of the committee felt that the limit should be more than half, however, because they felt more students will attend the carnival on the one night than attended the carnival in one of the two nights on previous years.

May Discourage "Stuffing"
Richard Seng, Spring Week chairman, said he hopes that the new limit will discourage "stuffing" ticket boxes by organizations. He said he thinks groups will not find as much difficulty meeting the maximum number of tickets, and that groups will not feel as much pressure to have high ticket sales. Tickets will constitute one fourth of the total carnival points.

Although formerly a group was allowed to deduct up to $20 from its ticket sales for expenses in construction, the Spring Week Committee voted not to continue this plan. A group will not be permitted to deduct any amount from its ticket receipts this year.

Non-Monetary Prizes
The committee decided to accept the former rule used for Spring Week that prizes given by a booth must be a non-monetary object.

Daniel VanDuyne, carnival chairman, presented several plans for the arrangement of the booths. He suggested that rides be centered at one end so people would have to walk past the booths to reach them. He also suggested that food booths be located together near the rides.

VanDuyne will present a more detailed plan for arrangement to the committee Sunday.

LA Lecture

Ben-Dor to Speak On Ancient Scrolls

Dr. Immanuel Ben-Dor, visiting professor of Biblical archaeology at Harvard University, will speak on "The Dead Sea Scrolls" at 8 p.m. tonight in 121 Sparks.

His lecture, which will be illustrated with slides, is sponsored by the Liberal Arts Lecture Series and the Hillel Forum. It will be open to the public.

Previous to his appointment at Harvard, Dr. Ben-Dor held a similar position at the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago. He is on leave from his position of deputy director of the Department of Antiquities of the State of Israel.

As an archaeological specialist in pottery, he was asked in 1947 to identify the pottery jars in which the Dead Sea Scrolls were found.

"I examined them and concluded that they probably were an unknown type of pottery," Dr. Ben-Dor said while speaking on Biblical archaeology at Harvard Divinity School.

After doing some research in reports of excavations he reversed his decision after finding that a similar jar had been found in

MISS SHIRLEY STERN

OK Joe?

Just thought you might be interested in knowing that each girl at the Beta Sigma Rho South Sea Island party this past Saturday night received a genuine lei. (Make sure the printers don't misspell that). In fact each lei was composed of seventy baby orchids. (If you're really nose-y, they cost the Beta Sig's about $4.00 each.)

But the one girl who caught the time worn eye of our weary photographer was an intriguing looking brunette named Shirley Stern, who coincidentally was destined to be our OK Joe girl of this week.

New Paragraph:

Admittedly we are rather fussy about our prints. To maintain quality, we absolutely have to be. But all of our efforts for quality go down the drain when one of the "copy firms" attempts to make duplicates of one of our portraits. All the fine tonal gradations we've strived for are completely washed out, giving a pasty effect to their copy print, and we as the maker of the original print have to take credit for a poor job we never did. Not to mention ethics. Therefore, effective this past Jan. 1st, all prints made at this studio are being copy-written, thus making it illegal and liable for court action for any firm copying our prints without our permission.

Signs of the time:

... the fact that Professor Werner's column "the Bookworm," makes the Centre Daily Times worth reading—even if he did flunk me in '49.

... the first-class food this guy "Christy" gives at the old Chuck Wagon spot.

... the casual impunity with which some coeds are campused for two weeks.
