

Counseling Service Reduces Violations

By MARIAN BEATTY

Counseling by dormitory hostesses and the dean of women's staff has greatly reduced the number of major violations tried by Judicial.

JoAnn Fulton, Judicial chairman, reports that since the beginning of the fall semester only one major case has been brought before Judicial, the law-enforcing body of the Women's Student Government Association. A major offense involves a drinking or morals charge.

The counseling plan, inaugurated by the WSGA Senate last fall, provides for a series of counseling sessions rather than a formal accusation and trial by Judicial. The penalty for a major offense is a two week's strict campus and an entry on the student's permanent record.

"We don't like to give such a punishment, because it doesn't really solve the problem," Miss Fulton said. "A major record will keep a woman from holding office on campus, and could hinder her chances of getting a job. We feel that there's usually a reason for the offense, and helping the coed straighten it out is the important thing."

'A Great Accomplishment'
Discussing the unusual record, Patricia Douthett, past Judicial chairman, said: "I feel that this is a great accomplishment, one which proves the value of the new counseling plan."

In spite of the fact that the number of major cases has dropped to an unprecedented low, Judicial is not on its way to becoming defunct. It still must approve or reject all recommendations for penalties. All penalties including blackmarks, must be approved by Judicial before they go into effect.

May Provide Defense
"Although there's rarely any question, and housemothers' recommendations usually go through, any woman can appear before Judicial in her own defense," Miss Fulton said.

Unusual cases are always asked to appear before Judicial, and any woman who feels she has been unjustly penalized can appear. This year three women protested 1 o'clock removals and one protested a strict weekend campus. The 1 o'clock removals were not changed, but Judicial decided that the campus was too strict a penalty.

Between 10 and 15 women usually appear after each vacation to explain lateness in returning because of bad roads, accidents, or traveling conditions.

Created on campus in 1923 as a part of the women's student government, Judicial was designed to replace the women's Tribunal. Originally all underclass women came under its jurisdiction, and were tried by a board of four, one senator from each class. Several years later, however, the Freshman Regulations Board was established to try freshman infractions, and the Judicial board was increased to eight members, all upperclasswomen.

Members are chosen each spring by a screening board, and must have a 2.2 average and the approval of the WSGA president, Senate and the dean of women. Judicial decides on the penalties for all infractions of WSGA rules, except morals charges, which are handled by the dean of women. No charges or penalties are ever made public.
