

Spadaro Quits Post As 'Lion' Chairman

Robert Spadaro, Lion Party clique chairman, resigned his post yesterday.

The resignation takes effect Sunday, when Lion Party will meet to elect an entire new slate of clique officers.

Spadaro, much talked about political figure during the spring elections, said he resigned because his main political objective had been achieved—political freedom.

When asked what he meant by political freedom, Spadaro said that previous to this year campus politicians had their hands tied. However, he said, this year most of the barriers were broken and much more freedom had been gained.

Explaining how the politicians' hands were tied, Spadaro used this year's spring election as an example. "For the first time this year," he said, "the parties used controversial issues which affected the students, instead of dead planks." The Elections Committee's right to reject party planks without allowing for appeal was rescinded, he said, untying party hands.

Referred to BX

Spadaro was referring to the Book Exchange plank Lion Party decided to run in the spring elections. The plank said the party would work toward allowing the BX to sell new books. The Elections Committee refused to allow the plank to be used, but the Lion Party was accused by the opposition of running the plank informally in spite of the plank rejection.

Spadaro appealed the committee's decision to reject the plank to the Supreme Court. The move was useless as the court upheld the committee's right to ban planks.

The committee's sovereign power to reject planks was eliminated when All-University Cabinet adopted an amendment to the Election Code three weeks ago.

tickets for the Rec Hall ceremonies when he obtains his cap and gown, except students graduating in uniforms, who will receive tickets through their Reserve Officers' Training Corps unit.

Admission to Rec Hall will continue until 10 minutes before the time of the ceremony, when the doors will be opened for about 500 additional guests.

Students have been assigned to seats in Beaver Field by college groupings. At the closing of the benediction, the students will file out one by one, passing a table where the presentation of the diplomas will be made by the dean of their college. The table will be situated at the bottom of the ramp of the section. Numbers will be printed on the program after the student's name. When he passes the table, he will give that number, which identifies his diploma.

limiting the committee's right to ban planks only to those planks which are outside the scope of political parties.

Procedural Errors Cleared

At the same Cabinet meeting, many procedural errors in the Election Code were cleared up.

The party election meeting is slated for 7 p.m. in 121 Sparks. Voting members—those holding party clique cards—will elect a clique chairman, a vice clique chairman, and a clique secretary.

Banner Retires From Journ School

After 30 years of instructing students in how to cover the news, Franklin C. Banner, professor of journalism and past head of the School of Journalism, will put down his pen and retire from active teaching at the University this month.

During this period Banner has taught over 1500 students in the fundamentals of journalism, and has seen the journalism school rise from 50 students to almost 1,000 in the post war peak of 1948, to rank fifth in undergraduate enrollment of the 70 colleges and universities that offer journalism courses.

Born in Missouri

Banner was born in Unionville, Missouri, in 1894. His first contacts with the press came during his high school days when he worked as a typesetter and reporter on a weekly paper.

He later acquired his Bachelor of Journalism and M.A. degrees at the University of Missouri. His first position after graduation was that of a reporter on the Kansas City Journal.

Honorary Membership

After working several years on Chicago papers, Banner traveled to England where he obtained an additional diploma in journalism from the University of London. While in England, Banner was elected an honorary member of the London Press Club and later a member of the Royal Institute of Journalists.

Franklin C. Banner

In 1926, Banner returned to this country and accepted an instructorship in English and journalism at the University. Journalism courses, which that year had five students seriously interested in newspaper work, could boast of 50 within a two year period after his arrival.

Banner sparked interest in the journalism courses by inviting editors and prominent men in the newspaper field to lecture during his classes. As a reward for his efforts, Banner was made head of the school of journalism in 1931, a post he held until last year when he was scheduled to retire. However, when a new department head failed to accept the position, Banner condescended to stay on "for one more year."

World Traveller

During his summer vacations and sabbatical leaves, Banner has arranged lengthy trips abroad. He has been around the world three times, and has visited every country in the world.

While he was barnstorming through the jungles of Africa during one journey, Banner spied a giant zulu warrior sitting on a tree stump roaring his head off. Upon closer inspection, Banner recalled, it turned out the native was reading an African translation of the popular comic strip, "Maggie and Jiggs."

Plans to Build

After his retirement this month, Banner plans to move to Southern California where he will build a house for his sister and himself.

Speaking about the students at the University, Banner was amazed how most of them prove themselves capable after graduation in coping with problems of their profession.
