

Senatorial Race Hinges On Conservation Issue

By LARRY JACOBSON

The senatorial race between incumbent Wayne L. Morse (D) and former Secretary of the Interior Douglas McKay (R) in Oregon may turn out to be a symbol of the fight between advocates of public and private conservation.

Dr. R. Wallace Brewster, professor of political science, said yesterday one of the big issues in the Oregon race is "who should control the national resources?"

Morse, he said, is an advocate of public control of conservation and public development of national resources. McKay stands on the other side, backing private control and development, he said.

Economy Liked to Resources
"Actually," Dr. Brewster said, "this issue of resources is only one of two real issues in that state. Their (Oregonians) economy is tied up with natural resources." In addition, he said, the people of that state aren't necessarily concerned with the Suez crisis or segregation.

So far, organized labor has poured huge sums of money into the Oregon campaign in an attempt to get Morse re-elected, Dr. Brewster said. The same has been true of Texas oil companies and other industries on the McKay side, he added.

Winner Swings Votes
Which ever group wins, the Professor said, can claim the victory as a vote for either private or public use of national resources: "The winner may well turn out as a standard bearer for his interest and be able to swing undecided votes in any test on the resource question."

As an example, Dr. Brewster put a hypothetical resource bill

Local Fraternity Goes National; Initiation Held

Delta Sigma Lambda fraternity last night became the Alpha Psi chapter of Sigma Tau Gamma in ceremonies held at St. Andrew's Episcopal Parish House.

The fraternity received its charter from representatives of the Clarion and Indiana State Teachers College chapters of the national group.

Alumni Attend
The ceremony, followed by a buffet supper, was attended by many alumni of the local house, according to president Kenneth Williamson, senior in chemical engineering from Williamsport.

About 25 Delta Sigma Lambda members and alumni were initiated into the national organization, he said.

Founded in Missouri
Sigma Tau Gamma, with about 40 chapters, mostly in the mid-west, was founded June 28, 1920, at Central Missouri State College. It accepted the local fraternity's petition in July, after its members voted last semester to join the national group.

Delta Sigma Lambda was founded in 1954 by members of the Demolay Club, who chose the name of a national Demolay fraternity which disbanded in the middle 1930's.
