

President Says Drinking Not 'Terrific Problem'

Turning to the problems of student drinking and raising teacher salaries, Dr. Walker said he does not view drinking as a "terrific problem." After all, he said, the laws of the commonwealth work for everyone, and no group at the University is exempt from them.

"In addition," the president said, "each student here has an extra responsibility as a member of this University. We expect students to refrain from disgracing the University." Many students, he said, drank before they came to the campus. Thus, people ought to realize that drinking is a problem of population, wherever it may be, and not a special habit bred on campus, Dr. Walker explained.

No Ban Contemplated
The president intimated that if fraternities and other groups stayed within the law and existing University regulations, no further restrictions are contemplated.

Earlier this year, Interfraternity Council passed a law banning freshmen drinking at fraternities.

Salary Raise Needed
Switching to the salary question, the president said he hoped to steadily raise teachers' salaries during the coming years. Expressing the belief that a University's reputation comes solely from its faculty, he said salaries must be raised in order to retain good professors and hire new ones.

"Today," Dr. Walker said, "our salaries do not compare favorably with comparable Universities of the same size and status." This is one level which must be raised, he said, and as far as possible, the state legislature will probably react favorably to requests for budgetary salary increases.

His Job is 'Best'
In line with his interest in teachers' salaries, President Walker said he thought teaching was the "best job in the world." Using the same description of his job, Dr. Walker said he could think of no other position (University president) that serves the country as well.

Where else, or in what other job, he asked, does one have the opportunity to affect so many of this nation's youth? At the University, he explained, one has the chance to guide thousands of students' lives along the right path. And the president's interest in students extends beyond the theory stage.

More Athletic Facilities
With a firm belief that individual sports build a man mentally as well as physically, Dr. Walker's pet project seems to be a hope for increased construction of athletic facilities for students.

"I think every student should go away from the University with some individual sport he can participate in for a good portion of his life," he said. Accordingly, the president said the University needs—and may get—increased facilities. Every student dormitory to be constructed, he said, will probably have an adjoining field with athletic facilities. "This is a definite need," the president emphasized.

early in the evening so she can get her homework done."

Miss Haben said another trend is earlier engagements, or at least "pinning," to the extent that girls are beginning to worry if they're not sporting a boy's fraternity badge by the end of their sophomore year.

"Actually," she said, "this kind of worry is so real that in planning our new women's dormitories we had to provide for upstairs recreation rooms where girls can amuse themselves over weekends if they don't have dates. Some girls take it so hard they just don't want to show themselves in public."
