5 History Students Discuss Hamilton's Life in Seminar

Five students are participating in a history seminar on the aspects of the life of Alexander Hamilton, the nation's first Secretary of the Treasury.

The seminar is being conducted in cooperation with the Alexander Hamilton Bicentennial Commission in observance of the 209th anniversary of Hamilton's birth.

Youth, Family Life Studied

Robert Maddox is studying Hamilton's youth, while Joseph Hudak, is studying Hamilton as a family man, a topic enhanced by Hamilton's alleged marital infidelities.

Jacob Michel, Robert Philliber, and George Buckhout are looking at Hamilton's political and philosophical relations with Aaron Burr, who killed Hamilton in a duel in 1804; with James Madison, with whom he worked to establish the constitution; and with Thomas Jefferson, with whom he disagreed on most issues.

Group to Write Essays

After exploratory discussions, research is now under way in preparation for essays to be written by the members of the seminar group. These papers will be submitted to the national collegiate essay contest which will be administered by the Bicentennial Commission.

The students participating in the seminar are enrolled in History 301. The course is under the direction of Dr. H. Trevor Colbourn, assistant professor of history.
