

IFC Will Standardize Control Board Checking

Interfraternity Council mixed up parliamentary procedural questions, criticism of the IFC Board of Control's manner of checking, and discussion on the effectiveness of the freshman drinking ban last night, and out of it all came a committee to set up standard procedures for Board of Control checkers.

Group members were also told that an IFC request to lift the parking ban downtown—slated to go into effect Thursday—was rejected by the borough manager. IFC president Daniel Land told the group a last-ditch effort will be made to lift the ban when he takes the problem to the borough council.

The Board of Control discussion was sparked by Sigma Pi president Joseph Hartnett who presented a request from the IFC Presidents' Workshop mandating IFC checkers to ask for a house officer to accompany the checkers when they go into a house.

Checkers Escorted
Previously, checkers have been escorted through the house by pledges on door duty. Actually, Hartnett said, the checkers have no legal right to barge into a house. As mere courtesy, he added, the checkers should ask for an officer to accompany them.

This way, Hartnett said, the officer can explain possible discrepancies which pledges aren't equipped to handle.

Land immediately ruled the motion out of order, saying the Board of Control is an offshoot of the executive branch and that IFC cannot tell the executive branch how to enforce legislation. Hartnett argued that the legislative meetings could set certain limits within which the executive branch could operate.

Methods Criticized
During the ensuing discussion, several members criticized the Board of Control's methods of checking. Some said the checkers rush into a house, others said pledges aren't qualified to show checkers around the house.

Speaking against Hartnett's motion, several members said by the time an officer could be obtained to show the checker around a house, discrepancies such as freshman drinking could be covered up. The drinking ban on freshmen is obviously very hard to enforce, some members said, and the checkers are only trying to help houses when they check.

Too many freshmen who have been drinking can be hidden by the time a house officer is obtained, they said.

A successful challenge of the chair brought Hartnett's motion back on the floor where it was passed by a large majority, accompanied by a motion to set up the committee.

Silva Sees Victory For GOP Candidate

By BARB MARTINO

Predicting the outcome of this year's elections, Dr. Ruth C. Silva, associate professor of political science, forecast a Republican victory in the race for the presidency, in her speech to the Faculty Luncheon Club yesterday.

According to surveys, President Dwight D. Eisenhower will get 52 per cent of the popular vote, and probably a majority of the electoral votes, she said. He will not, however, win by a landslide, and some possibility of a Democratic victory still exists, she said.

Adlai E. Stevenson, with 48 per cent of the popular vote, may still receive the majority of electoral votes. Many factors enter into this possibility, she said.

Among them is a possible three-way-split in the South caused by Dixiecrat Coleman Andrews. Votes for Andrews will especially prey on the Eisenhower vote, and the plurality vote would be thrown to Stevenson, she explained.

Stevenson's Possibilities
In the event of a Stevenson victory, Dr. Silva predicted the way in which it would be accomplished. Stevenson will carry ten out of the 11 Southern states, receiving 118 electoral votes. Dr. Silva said Stevenson will probably not carry Florida.

He will pick up 39 electoral votes by sweeping four of the five border states (all but Maryland),
