

Atwater Urges Support Of Yugoslavia by U.S.

By JUDY HARKISON

It is definitely in the interest of the United States to support Yugoslavia economically in an effort to help it maintain its own national brand of communism, Dr. Elton Atwater, associate professor of political science, believes.

Referring to the decision of President Dwight D. Eisenhower two weeks ago to continue economic aid to Yugoslavia, Dr. Atwater said that the United States "wants to make doubly sure Yugoslavia will continue to be independent of the Soviet Union" before renewing military aid also.

"We have always hesitated to extend military aid," he said, "unless the recipient countries agreed with our general military and strategic objectives."

Ike Pressured

In view of the recent visits between the Yugoslav and Soviet leaders, he continued, Eisenhower was under pressure to give no aid whatsoever to the Titoist country. The present plan of economic but not military aid is a kind of compromise.

Dr. Atwater explained that "Titoism is a different kind of communism from that developed in the Soviet Union" and listed the following differences:

1. "It has abandoned forced collectivization of agriculture in favor of voluntary collectivization.
2. "Its industries are controlled by local workers councils rather than by ministries of the national government.
3. "It has concentrated its energies on domestic national problems and has not intervened in the affairs of other countries as Soviet communism has done."

Polish Revolt

The Polish revolt last week is similar to what happened in Yugoslavia in 1948, he asserted, in that it represents an effort to develop a national version of Communism independent of the Soviet Union.

However, in 1948, he said, the Soviets expelled Yugoslavia from the Cominform and tried to force them to surrender their own version of communist theory.

"The new policy of Khrushchev seems to be accepting this deviation in communism," Dr. Atwater explained. "This can create repercussions on the whole group of communist states, thus making it harder to keep them under Soviet control than in the past."

Soviets Weakened

This weakens the Soviet position in Eastern Europe and to that extent strengthens the group of nations trying to preserve themselves against the threat of communist expansion, he continued.

Concerning the effect on the United States, Dr. Atwater said that "while we don't agree with the Communist principle of Yugoslavia or Poland we can be glad these countries are able to stand independently in their own right and not be dominated by the Soviets."

Popularity Enhanced

Dr. Atwater believes this development may possibly enhance Eisenhower's popularity in the current election campaign although the administration has rightly not attempted to take credit for it.

The events in Poland became possible primarily because of a shift in Soviet policy since the death of Stalin and not because of any specific policies of the United States, he said.

"Since an independent Poland has long been an objective of American policy," Dr. Atwater explained, "the present situation is welcomed by all Americans, and the administration in power will naturally benefit somewhat from it."

Poly Sci Class To See Trial Of Socrates

A portion of the stage play "Barefoot in Athens," depicting the trial of Socrates, will be presented by television to students in Political Science 3 at 9 a.m. today.

The Experimental Theatre production will be given by the Penn State Players. This will be the second year that the program has been televised over the experimental facilities in Sparks.

The play will originate in the TV studio in Sparks, and will be seen by political science students in the various viewing rooms.

Others who wish to see the play will be admitted to 10 Sparks, according to R. Wallace Brewster, professor of political science.

Nancy Wilder, a graduate student in drama, will direct the production.

The cast will include Kelly Yeaton, Socrates; Robert Reifsnider, Anytas; Mark Wallace, Meletos; Richard Higgins, Lycon; Jon Wilder, the magistrate; Derek Swine, Crassos; and Bruce Mackley, Lamprocles.

The savings and loan industry began in 1831 in a suburb of Philadelphia.

Debaters to Enter Princeton Seminar

The men's debate team will participate in a debate seminar Friday at Princeton University.

No regular debate topic will be discussed but the debaters will discuss original problems which will be assigned an hour before each debate. This is the first year that a tournament of this type has been held.

Debaters attending the seminar are Thomas Hollander, Robert Adams, Irwin Bass, and Edward Fegert. John Brillhart, assistant debate coach, will accompany the group.

The regular debate season will open Nov. 17 against the Vermont debate squad.

Employment Forms Will Provide File For Summer Jobs

Summer employment survey forms are being circulated in University residence halls by the Student Employment Service in order to build a job location and information file.

The purpose of the survey is to find out what types of summer employment students undertake, what the living and working conditions are like, and what salaries in various types of jobs pay.

All students except freshmen are to fill out the forms.

Last year many students were able to learn about the pay and living and working conditions of various types of jobs by checking the results of the 1955 survey. The employment's service is especially interested in reports of poor living and working conditions so that other students may be alerted before applying for positions.

THE only advantage, other than becoming exceedingly rich*, in being a State College business man is that you can occasionally vent your opinion in a paid ad such as this.

LAST nite we observed a preview of the new '57 autos. What a flagrant insult to anyone's sense of good design! It was a mass of paper thin steel molded to make a ground bound vehicle resemble a belly-heavy jet plane.

WITH parking space at a premium everywhere, U.S. manufacturers blatantly continue to increase the length of new cars. For those of us who yearn to lug a grand piano around, this is all well and good.

MAYBE this helps to keep the economy of the country up, but the slightest dent in these over loaded, tin-coated balloons will cost you an arm and a leg to repair. If you wish substantiation of this permit us to give you a guided tour of the right rear fender of our car. A couple of small dents, a paint scratch, etc., and voila! — $307.00 to repair.

PUBLICLY, we vow, that 1955 was the year we purchased our last American car.

NOT that this has placed you in a portait buying mood, but if you're curious, the secret of our success, if any, is attributable to the fact that the same slave who produces your finished product is the same one who took your portait.

THE first person to find the meaning of the capitalized letters TLWMPNT above can have a prepaid vacation in Coney Island with my father-in-law.

YES, we DID shoot several parties in color this past weekend.
