

Election Post-Mortem

Sorauf Sees Stevenson's End, Kefauver's Survival in Politics

Dr. Frank Sorauf, assistant professor of political science, said yesterday that Adlai E. Stevenson is now politically "pretty dead" but that Kefauver will probably try for the presidential nomination in 1960.

Dr. Sorauf believes that Kefauver still "has the bug," and since he campaigned in Florida on the last day of the campaign, many people believe that this was a punch for 1960 instead of 1956.

"Kefauver is propelled by rather considerable ambition and has enough support in the Middle West to keep him before the public," he said. "He can please a number of people with his hand-shaking and 'bless you's'."

Stevenson Lacks Leadership
Dr. Sorauf said that Stevenson is still technically considered the leader of the Democratic party but is in no position to exercise leadership.

His position now is similar to that after the 1952 election, he said, but this year after his second defeat Stevenson carries even less influence.

Dr. Sorauf termed Gov. G. Meenen "Soapy" Williams of Michigan as a "real threat" for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1960.

"He has won five straight terms as governor, and although the state has gone Republican in two presidential elections, Williams has been elected," he said.

New Group Rises
At the moment, the younger group in the party will exercise more control and authority, Dr. Sorauf believes. This includes, he said, Sen. John H. Kennedy of Massachusetts, Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee, and Sen. Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota.

Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee, Dr. Sorauf said, is not a real possibility. However, he continued, the Democratic leadership possibilities depend upon the party's decision on appeasing the South again. If many in the party think the South should be "wooed," then Clement or some other border state Democrat is a real possibility, he said.

Dr. Sorauf believes that Gov. Averill Harriman of New York is also "politically dead." It would have made no difference whom the Democrats ran in 1956—he couldn't have beaten Eisenhower, he said.

"Another candidate might have come closer," he continued. "If less emphasis had been placed on the draft and nuclear weapons testing and more on the rising cost of living, the gap might have been narrowed."

Although Dr. Sorauf didn't predict the vote of the border states, he said that he hadn't expected quite the amount of Republican strength shown.

The Republican party still can't elect people to state and local office in most parts of the South," he said. "Here it is a long way from the two-party system."

Dr. Sorauf believes that the outcome of the congressional and senatorial election represents a stunning victory for the Democrats, particularly with the overwhelming Eisenhower victory.

Democratic Power
While the Democrats lost the presidency to an extremely popular personality, he said, it indicates that the Democratic party has a great deal of strength in the country.

Calling the Democrats the "majority party," Dr. Sorauf said the only way the GOP's can win is to oppose the Democrats with a particularly appealing personality or issue.

"More voters seem to identify themselves permanently with the Democratic party than with the Republican," he said. "Unless the Republicans have a strong candidate, the majority of American people turn to the Democrats."

Dartmouth Poet Presents 2 Rare Books to Library

Dr. Richard Eberhart, poet in residence at Dartmouth, has presented the rare book room of the Pattee Library with two books, both collectors' items.

One, "A Bravery of Earth," is his first book. It was published in London in 1930.

The second book, "An Herb Basket," is an example of "beautiful printing," an old-fashioned printing.

Personally Inscribed
Both books are personally inscribed by the poet, who gave the first talk at the Liberal Arts Lecture Series on October 25.

"An Herb Basket" is inscribed with "To the Pattee Library at the Pennsylvania State University on the occasion of the first Liberal Arts Lecture (a reading) of the year."

The book originally belonged to his wife, and her name is written on the lower left-hand corner of the page.

Book Is Only Eight Pages
The book, only eight pages long, is made of thick white paper and has dull, gray paper for a cover. Only 155 copies of the book were printed.

Both books, because they are personally autographed and are out of print, are now collector's items.

The books may be seen, along with a collection of Dr. Eberhart's writings, in the display cases on the second floor of the Pattee Library.

Will Be In Library
After the display is finished, they will be placed in the rare book room of the library.

Moses Hadas, professor of Greek at Columbia University, is the next scheduled speaker for the Liberal Arts Lecture Series.

He will talk on "The Relevance of Ancient Books," on Dec. 3.
