TV System Expanded In Sparks

The closed circuit television system in Sparks has been expanded so that next semester it will be possible to televise two courses at the same time.

Plans for the spring semester indicate that the television system will be utilized for almost every class hour.

Because of this, a second pair of cameras was installed during Thanksgiving vacation in order that rooms 10 and 20 may both be used to originate programs.

Ray V. Watkins, University scheduling officer, has announced the following courses to be given by television next semester:

Psychology 2, Sociology 1, Commerce 30, Music 5, Political Science 3, Accounting 1, Psychology 17, Economics 2, Education 1, Air ROTC 4, Speech 200, Education 424, and several chemistry and engineering courses.

Watkins said that all courses being given by television this semester are scheduled to be given next semester also. Additional courses will probably also be televised, he said.

Magazine Uses Profs' Article

An article on "Further Studies of the Use of Television for Universities," written by three members of the University instructional research staff, has appeared in the Audio-Visual Communication Review.

The report is a summary of last year's experimental research with closed circuit television at the University.

It was written by Dr. Clarence R. Carpenter, director of instructional research; Leslie P. Greenhill, director and professor of psychology; and William S. Ray, associate professor of psychology.

Reprints of the article may be obtained at the office of the instructional research program in 307 Burrowes.

Grad Involved in Crash

A car driven by Janet Terman, graduate student in chemistry from Pine Grove Mills, skidded and hit a guard fence along Rt. 545 about 9 a.m. yesterday.

No one was injured. Damages were estimated at $250, police said.

Lion Misses His Shadow In the Snow

The Nittany Lion sauntered lazily to the door of his warm den and peered outside. All around the den, the ground was covered with snow. He looked at the trees, white and fluffy-looking, and saw little icicles hanging from the end of the branches.

"I suppose," said the Lion moodily, "that this sight would be beautiful to an artist's eyes. However, I find it cold and wet and quite unnecessary. The only solution I know is to go back to bed and hope it goes away."

And the Lion returned to his warm bed, and thought about all the classes that students have to attend and lions don't.

The weatherman offered little hope to the Lion. The cold and snow is expected to continue, according to the University weather station.

The forecast calls for continued cold weather today and tomorrow. Snow flurries are expected at least until tomorrow night. The low temperature tomorrow will be about 30 degrees.

University Cops Livestock Honor

The University yesterday swept the International Livestock Exposition's most coveted honors, winning both the grand and reserve grand champion steer awards.

Show officials said the one-two placing by the University was the fourth such feat by a single exhibitor in the 57 year history of the International, according to the Associated Press.

They said Iowa State College took both top awards twice and the University of California once.

The University won the grand championship with PS Troubadour 2nd, a 985-pound senior shorthorn calf. It took the reserve grand championship with a 1160-pound Aberdeen-Angus junior yearling named PS Eileenmere 2nd.

Both steers previously had won grand and reserve champion awards at two Eastern shows.

Jewish Holiday To Be Observed

Observance of the eight-day Jewish holiday of Chanukah, the festival of lights and dedication, will begin at 5 p.m. today with a candle lighting ceremony in the Hillel Foundation.

Similar services will be officiated at the same hour every evening of the holiday.

Leader Quizzed On Impersonality Of TV Courses

By MIKE MOYLE
Collegian Acting Editor

Referring to the experimental television courses as "nothing more than correspondence courses," Duke Kaminski, Harrisburg correspondent for the Philadelphia Bulletin, asked Governor George M. Leader yesterday why the University is not offering more personalized instruction.

Kaminski hinted that he felt since the University's budget has been getting higher and higher for the past few years the instruction should be becoming more personalized instead of less personalized, as evidenced by the expansion of the television program.

Leader said that the state has no agency to check the way the University spends its money but said that he is sure they are spending it wisely.

"The University has its own auditors," Leader said, "and we have no group which tells us how much money is spent on any one project."

The governor said he thought it was "roughly correct" that the University would be asking for five million dollars more than in 1954, although he has not officially seen the appropriation request.

Due to increased costs and enrollment, Leader said he wouldn't be surprised if the University raised fees in the near future.

He said that all colleges and universities are experiencing these rising costs and that he thinks the day is not far off when it will be as hard to get into college as it is presently to get into medical school.

Leader also announced that Amos E. Neyhart, administrative head of the Institute of Public Safety, has been named chairman of the governor's Highway Safety Council.

The council, a volunteer group, will meet in Harrisburg, Dec. 14 to formulate plans and to organize.

No progress report has been received yet by the Tax Study Commission, Leader revealed, but he said he has hopes that the group will come up with at least one concrete recommendation before its Jan. 1 deadline.

When questioned on the amount of new taxes the state might need Leader said that at present, "a lot of revisions will undoubtedly be made by a lot of people" before the tax report comes out.

The question was prompted by varying reports from the Pennsylvania Economy League and the State Chamber of Commerce, one stating that 250 million dollars in new taxes was needed and the other stating that the state would need no new taxes.

Class Board Disapproves Court Plan

The Junior Class Advisory Board went on record Monday night as opposing the revised plan for the Supreme Court as now before All-University Cabinet.

There were no dissenting votes on the motion following a lengthy discussion highlighted by many objections to the present Supreme Court compromise.

Cabinet is to bring up the revision for the final vote tomorrow night.

'Too Large and Unwieldy'

Many members felt that if this present proposal is passed by Cabinet, the Supreme Court would be too large and unwieldy.

It was also felt that the present revision would give Cabinet too much control on the court.

One member pointed out that it would be ridiculous for the same persons to legislate bills in Cabinet and then, as Supreme Court members, act on the constitutionality of the bills if and when it is questioned.

Served as Check

It was also brought out that Supreme Court was originally formed to serve as a check for Cabinet. Since it has not done this a new plan must be found, but the Advisory Board does not feel that the present plan is suitable.

Lantern Given $500 by Council

The Liberal Arts Student Council last night appropriated $500 to the Lantern so that a record-number of 800 copies might be printed in an all-out drive for the development and expansion of the literary magazine.

By making this appropriation the council is temporarily venturing beyond its budget, and making a financial gamble.

Because of Lantern's record of successful past sales and because the council feels that Lantern is a step in the direction of culture at the University, the council has made the move, considering it "a worthy risk."

The council hopes that other organizations such as the hat societies, and the literary clubs and honorary societies will give Lantern their support, since the magazine is printed for everyone, not just students of the liberal arts college.
