

Agronomy Prof Named To New University Post

Dr. Henry R. Fortmann, associate professor of agronomy at the University, has been named assistant director of the University's Agricultural Experiment Station, effective April 1.

In this new position, approved by the Board of Trustees last week, Dr. Fortmann will assist in administering the growing program in agricultural research. Last year the program included more than 325 studies in all areas of agriculture and operated on a $2,500,000 budget.

Cornell Dean Will Lecture On Workers

Dr. John W. McConnell, dean of the Graduate School of Cornell University, will speak on "The Older Worker in the American Economy" at 8 p.m. Monday in 10 Sparks.

The lecture is part of the Graduate School Series and is open to the public.

A professor of industrial and labor relations at Cornell University, Dr. McConnell has been dean of the Graduate School since 1955.

Dr. McConnell, who was graduated from Dickinson College, received his Ph.D. degree from Yale University, was a Fulbright lecturer in India in 1953-54 and is presently research counsel for the New York State Joint Legislative Committee on Unemployment Insurance.

From 1929 to 1932 Dr. McConnell taught in the American University at Cairo. Later he was a research associate in the Institute of Human Relations at Yale University.

Dr. McConnell is the co-author of the Twentieth Century Fund's book on "Economic Needs of Older People," and has also written "The Evolution of Social Classes" and "Community Programs of Economic Security."

Grad Science Club Plans Open House

Research in the field of the geological sciences will be the subject for an open house to be sponsored March 15 by the Society of the Sigma Xi, graduate science society.

The program is scheduled for 4 and 6 p.m. Guided tours will commence in the Mineral Science auditorium.

The tour will include examination of laboratories and equipment available for analysis of rocks and minerals such as x-ray machines, spectographs, electron microscopes and mass spectrometers.

Newman Club Party

The Newman Club will hold a "Sno-Ball Party" from 8:30 to 11:30 tonight at the student center. Admission is free.

Fortmann, who will continue to hold the title of associate professor of agronomy, is a native of Frederic, Wis., and a graduate of the University of Wisconsin. He received his master's degree from Oregon State College and his doctor of philosophy degree from Cornell University. Dr. Fortmann served as a research assistant at both institutions before his appointment to the University faculty in 1949.

His work at the University has been concerned with forage crops. He has headed various research projects in this field and has prepared or cooperated in the preparation of more than 30 publications on this work.

Dr. Fortmann has been a collaborator on U.S. Department of Agriculture research projects, a representative of Pennsylvania on the Northeast Forage Crops Technical Committee and a representative of 12 Northeastern States in the Planning Conference of the National Foundation Seed Project. He was chairman of the annual Seedmen's Conference in 1953 and 1955 and is serving as secretary of the Eastern Alfalfa Improvement conference.

'Madwoman' Review-

(Continued from page one) to oil and to destruction at the hands of the Madwoman. Cavey, who carries his boots when entering the Countess' celler because it's "etiquette," tells the Madwoman of the wrong beliefs concerning happenings in the city sewers and the many "little gifties" which float down to him.

Applause Well-Deserved Also included in the "applause-well-deserved department" are Kathryn Kelleher as the Madwoman of Passy and her imaginary dog Dickie. The Madwoman of St. Sulpice, played by Joyce Basch, was the weakest of the "daffy women." Her acting seemed to be artificial and the result of direction rather than a good characterization.

Linda K. Gerber, though her voice and actions made her convincing as the law-minded Madwoman of La Concorde, seemed to try a "bit too hard" during the trial scene which condemned the evil men to their doom. Her facial expressions were exaggerated to the point that they could have distracted from the part of the Ragpicker—had he not been so forceful.

Make-Up Lacking Miss Gerber's make-up, which gave her the appearance of a bearded-lady, ranked with that of Lowell Salmon, as the Broker, who appeared in the first-act wearing the red face of a clown.

The parts of Irma, played by Irene Rothstein, and Pierre, portrayed by George Vlachos, suffered from very weak performances. Their acting was not in tune with the caliber of most of the cast.

Irma's soliloquy produced a let-down at the end of the first-act and Pierre's "love-scene" with the Madwoman was most unconvincing and insincere.

An equally poor performance was given by James Hopkins as the Sergeant, whose voice barely projected to the second row of the auditorium.

Derek Swire in the role of the Deaf-Mute rendered an excellent "silent" performance with his gestures of sign language. Imaginative, Enchanting Sets Plaudits, as usual, go to Russell Whaley for his imaginative setting of a French cafe and an "enchanting" celler set. Complete with a broken picture frame, dress-fitting form, and discarded statue, the cellar had an air of fantasy which fits the mood of the play.

From the cellar could be seen the same street-scene as in the first-act, but more dramatically lighted.

Working with such a large cast, seldom seen in campus productions, must have been difficult but Warren Smith, the director, accomplished it, providing, all-in-all, a worthwhile evening of comedy and satire.
