

2 Problems Delay WSGA In Planning Honor House

The Women's Student Government Association has run into two major problems which will delay its proposed honor house.

Since women students are in the midst of choosing rooms for next fall, the committee studying the proposed house has decided that it is too late to set up the honor house for next year.

Also, the group has not been able to find a large enough house.

Two members of the implementation committee visited Biddle House, the honor house at Dickinson College, last weekend. The purpose of the trip was to find the possibilities of setting up an honor house on campus.

Elm Cottage Considered

The women discussed the institution and success of the honor house with Victoria Hann, dean of women. They told Miss Hann they had considered using Elm Cottage, which would hold 15 women. She said that 15 women out of the total enrollment of 2672 women was an insignificant showing and that the whole idea would be lost in the crowd. Thirty-two women out of the total enrollment of 321 women live in Dickinson's honor house.

Miss Hann told the women that she herself instituted the honor house. She did this by calling a meeting of senior women and asking who would like to live in an honor house.

Response Described

At first, the response was not satisfactory, because this meant that the women would have to move from a modern residence hall into an old house which did not have many modern facilities.

"When I finally had enough women to fill the house," she said, "I knew that they really wanted to live in an honor house for the sake of the experiment not for any personal convenience or special permissions."

However, this year after the women had signed up to live in the honor house, they were given special permissions.

Miss Hann said that she felt that the honor house was a success. She added that the college has purchased another small house to be used as an honor house next year. These two houses have enough room for all senior women. Eventually the college plans to have all women living in honor houses.

Dickinson College does not have an honor code. The women in the honor house are on their honor to obey only the regular dormitory rules such as signing in and out, not having liquor in their rooms, not encouraging raids and not going out after hours. Any other rule would come under the jurisdiction of the administration.

Lecture Broadcast Will Be Re-Run

A tape recording of a lecture by Dr. Lois Hyslop, associate professor of Romance languages, will be presented at 7 tonight on the WDFM program, "The Simmons Series in Review."

This lecture, "Bauderlarie on Poe," was originally presented during the Simmons Lecture Series sponsored by the Department of German.

Each week throughout the semester the program will present a recording of a lecture from the series, which has been held for 10 years.

Contest Deadline Extended

The deadline for registering for the Ugly Man Contest has been extended to 5 p.m. today.

The extension was made because only 32 candidates had entered by 5 p.m. Friday, according to David Allison, contest chairman. This would mean a smaller contest and parade than those held in previous years.

Fraternity candidates must register in person at the Hetzel Union desk. Men who registered last week can pick up the photography schedule at the desk. Pictures will be taken Thursday.

The Ugly Man Trophy this year will be awarded permanently to the fraternity winning it. Previously the trophy has been rotating, with the winning fraternity only keeping it for a year.
