Freshman Wins Tractor Contest

Joseph Hurlburt, freshman in agricultural education from Ashley Falls, Mass., took top honors in the men's division of the annual tractor driving contest on Saturday at the parking lot next to the Forestry Building.

Coeds proved too timorous to defend their driving ability. Last year four coeds participated in the contest, but this year there were no entries in the women's division.

Hurlburt was judged on safe driving and his ability to maneuver the tractor through obstacles in a serpentine course and to back it into a narrow stall at the finish.

He will receive a trophy from the Agricultural Engineering Club, sponsor of the contest.

most as many new buildings in the next 15 years as were erected in the entire previous 100-year history of the University.

In line with this expansion, Walker said eight new buildings are in the final planning stage. The new buildings planned are: an engineering building that will extend along College Ave. across the street from the theatres; a petroleum laboratory between Buckhout Laboratory and the Forestry Building; an extension to the Home Economics Building; a meats laboratory; a swine research center; new turkey breeder houses; and a military air and naval sciences building.

laid schemes of mice an' men gang aft agley, an' lea'e us nought but grief an' pain for promis'd joy!"

Maturity will demand "sober second thoughts" about quick and easy solutions for terminating the inevitable conflicts of interests of modern nations. Such solutions are advanced, for example, by well-meaning, if reckless, advocates of "preventive war" and by logical, if unrealistic, proponents of World Government Now.

The mature mind will also insist upon critically examining the consequences of alternative courses of action. Should we, for example, support Britain and France, our allies in Western Europe, in their efforts to protect their vital interests in the Near East and North Africa? Or should we take a strong anti-colonial position all over the world, regardless of the effect of this stand upon the Western Alliance? And what are the consequences of yet other alternatives?

Above all, the mature mind will be prudent, that is to say, possessed of that sound judgment which can wisely relate appropriate means to well-articulated ends. Such sound judgment will support a patient, firm diplomacy of accommodation, even though we may be strongly tempted by a less modest, more dramatic, policy which some urge as necessary to relax or destroy the tensions that threaten to make the whole world a garrison state or a common atomic incinerator.

This may not be a cheerful picture; but it does seem to me that we must face up to this more sobering view of the world in which we live.
