Pictorial Display in Library Relates University's History

By PAT O'NEILL

Posters proclaiming a prize fight in the old chapel, draft registration instructions and the campaign of the Anti-Slacks League are only a-part of the pictorial history of the University on display in the showcases on the first floor of the Fred Lewis Pattee Library.

This exhibit shows a history of the University from the days of the Farmers High School through posters, pamphlets and pictures. It was prepared from material from the Penn State collection by Mrs. Mary L. Mairs, curator of the collection and by Mrs. Ridge Riley, staff assistant.

The poster exhibit in the main show cases is divided in a chronological order, each showcase depicting a decade of the University's history.

"Teaser posters" may be seen in the more-than-50-years-ago showcase. These posters have some words in large capitals, as "Prize Fight in the Old Chapel," while the small printing underneath each word explained the actual meaning. In this case the poster told about a debate between the sophomore and freshman classes.

A poster showing how easy registration was in 1908 is exhibited in the 50-years-ago display case. Upperclassmen needed no matriculation card and they paid their fees after their program was made out.

World War I is the dominant topic in the 40-years-ago case. A message may be seen from Edwin Earle Sparks, then president of the University, to the men fighting in the war.

In the 30-years-ago display case a poster announces the creation of the school of education. During this time the University played the University of California in baseball.

A poster proclaiming the annual dance sponsored by The Daily Collegian is on exhibit in the 20-years-ago showcase. Admission was "only by a Collegian subscription dance ticket."

A special exhibit case is devoted to World War II posters. During this time the Women's Student Government Association sponsored a dance in which the admission was one candy bar. The candy was then donated to the armed forces.

In the 10-years-ago showcase there are several posters of the Anti-Slacks League. The league, incorporated by veterans returning to campus, was an effort to get coeds to stop wearing slacks. It was during this decade that classes started at 7:30 a.m. and ended at 5:20 p.m.

A Centennial display and a group of posters of activities of the last several years is another part of the exhibit.

A separate exhibit of pictures and documents of the Farmers High School may be seen in the display case nearest the elevator. Opposite this display case is an exhibit for freshmen only. It shows the old green dink, old handbooks and the dire proclamations sophomores once issued to freshmen.

Cook to Conduct Discussion Group

Donald M. Cook, assistant director of the University Placement Service, is co-chairman of a discussion group at the annual conference of the Middle Atlantic Placement Officers Association, meeting today at Pocono Manor.

The discussion topic will be "What the College Placement Office Expects of Industry" as a counterpart to "What Industry Expects of the College Placement Office."

George N. P. Leetch, director of the University Placement Service, is a member of the executive board of the association.

Business Bulletin Announces Editor

Lee Edwards, senior in business administration from Upper Darby, has been named editor-in-chief of the Biz-Ad Bulletin.

Other editors are Max Perlmutter, assistant editor; Patricia O'Neill, managing editor; Merle Rothstein, business manager; and David Reiner, circulation manager.

The Bulletin is sponsored by the Business Administration Student Council.

Seven editions of the Bulletin will be issued this year, Edwards said. Last year four issues were published.

2 Courses Added To TV Schedule

Two courses—Accounting 5 and Architecture I, have been added to the schedule of televised classes this fall. In addition 13 courses which were televised last semester are continuing on television this semester.

The enrollment in the 15 courses is 4216, about 200 more than the enrollment in the 18 classes offered last spring.

Air Science 3, with 915 students in two sections, has the largest enrollment. Two sections of Psychology 2 follow with a total of 809.

The course with the smallest enrollment is Nuclear Science, a special course offered by the Department of Metallurgy in cooperation with the Atomic Energy Commission. Television is used for the laboratory section of this class where microscopic specimens are presented over TV.

The other courses offered on television are Accounting 1, Economics 2, Education 1, Engineering 1, German 1, Music 5, Sociology 1 and Metallurgy 59, 200 and 406.

Most of the courses given by TV are introductory courses geared to television presentation. However, Leslie P. Greenhill, director of the Educational Research Program, which has charge of the classes, said they try to make room for one or two new courses each semester to see how well they will adapt to television. Televising classes is only part of the activity of the Program. The other part is doing research to evaluate TV for classes in terms of effectiveness, suitability, acceptability and practicability. The results of experiments, as (Continued on page eight)

Say Merry Christmas to your favorite Penn Stater with a Penn State Class Ring

A class ring is more than just another piece of jewelry. It's a mark of distinction which he or she has earned the right to wear.

A $5.00 deposit will enable him to come in, choose his favorite stone, be fitted for the correct ring size, and tell us what year he plans to graduate.*

If you already know these facts, send them directly to us. It's as simple as that! If ordered now, his ring will arrive in plenty of time to be his favorite Christmas present.

*Freshmen and sophomores are not eligible.
