

Pitt Dean Says Industry Should Aid Education

Grant Established For Upperclassmen

A scholarship aid fund has been established by the Link-Belt Co. to provide amounts of up to $350 a year to juniors and seniors per year to juniors and seniors enrolled in curriculums of interest to the company.

An initial grant of $1000 has been received for the first year. The scholarships may not be awarded to students who have received other scholarship aid.

The student selected must have demonstrated good scholarship and must be a citizen of this country. If the student continues to meet qualifications, he will be eligible for renewal of the scholarship.

Dr. Jones spoke at the annual convocation of the Graduate School, held last night in Schwab Auditorium.

He said that the problem of handling graduate students in the immediate future is even more acute than the undergraduate problem. The number of graduate students is increasing at a high rate, he explained, and their education is normally more expensive than that of undergraduate work.

Jones said that industries and professions should take some responsibility for graduate education because they need graduate students in their fields.

The emphasis in graduate work is shifting from arts and letters to industrial and professional work, Jones added. He said the type of graduate study is changing from the "creative" style of the arts and letters student to the "pyramid" style of the professional student.

Jones explained that schools are now emphasizing the "pyramid" idea of keeping the student well-informed about current material, rather than emphasizing research as in the field of arts and letters. He emphasized that the educators must not overlook the importance of creative education.

But, he cautioned, to really educate the student, the educator must teach him to be well-informed. "If we're to give the best education we can, we must push students beyond their own rate of knowledge and teach them to keep up," he said.

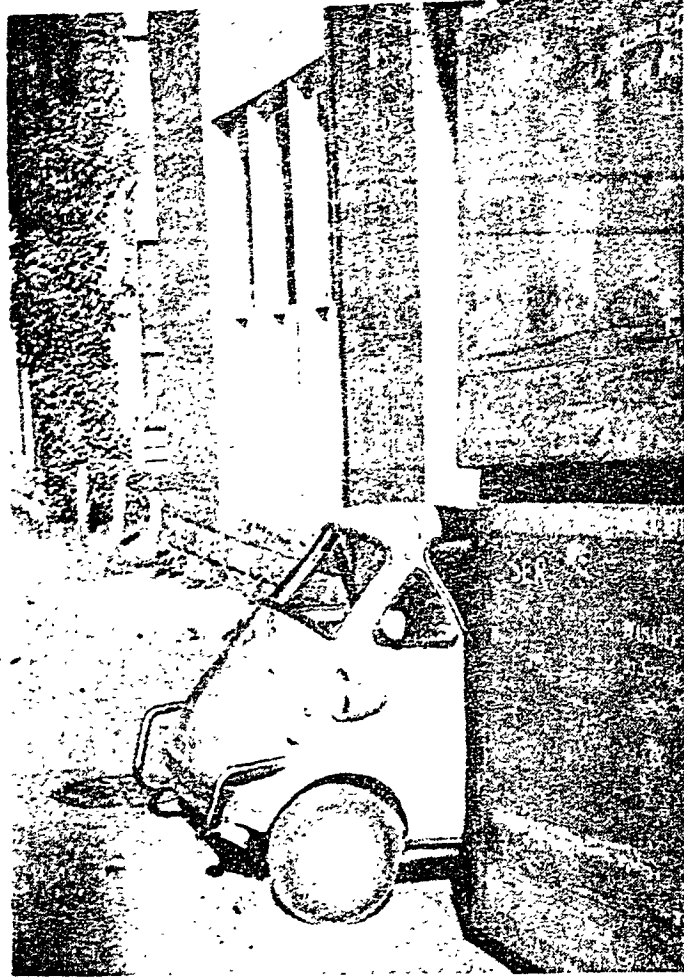

Jones emphasized the increased importance of the graduate student in today's complex world. "Advanced knowledge," he said, "is more and more in demand in every field, and people with advanced knowledge are more and more needed in our society."

But the opportunity to "master a field" is no longer a reality, he said. The world is so complex that no field can be completely mastered, he explained, and a student can hope to learn about only a portion of any field.

DID IT COME IN THE CRATE? might be a legitimate question for this pint-sized Isetta parked outside Engineering E yesterday. Perhaps the "Reusable—Do Not Destroy" markings on the crates suggest a garage. Anyway, they might conveniently serve to block the view of campus patrolmen seeking illegal parkers.

Leonides Plans Nominations For Dorm Representatives

Nominations for Leonides residence hall unit representatives and alternates will be held Monday in all women's residence halls.

Elections will be held the following Monday in conjunction with the Women's Student Government Association and the Women's Recreation Association elections.

The nominations will be conducted by present Leonides Council representatives.

All independent unaffiliated women are members of Leonides. All freshman women are automatically members.

A representative and alternate are elected by the majority vote of their unit each fall.

Duties of the elected representatives are to attend Leonides Council meetings every Monday, and to hold dormitory unit meetings every two weeks.

Osborne Granted Leave for Study

Milton S. Osborne, head of the Department of Architecture, has been granted a leave of absence for the 1957-58 academic year by the Board of Trustees.

He will spend the year at the University of Toronto to study the curriculum offered by the school of architecture there. He will also make recommendations for plans for a new building to house the Toronto architectural school.

Osborne joined the University faculty in 1946 after serving as director of the Department of Architecture and Fine Arts at the University of Manitoba, Canada, for 17 years.

Blue Band To Depict Instruments

The Blue Band will march through a new routine depicting musical instruments this afternoon at Franklin Field in Philadelphia for the annual Penn State-Penn football game.

During half-time the band will form five musical instruments to the accompaniment of a medley of songs: saxophone, "September Song"; violin, "Play, Fiddle, Play"; piano, "Prelude in C Sharp Minor"; trumpet, "Sugar Blues"; and trombone, "Sally Trombone."

The Blue Band first will appear on the field just before the kickoff to spell out "PENN." The band then will move down the field to the "Victory" march and spell out "STATE."

The half-time show will begin with the "Nittany Lion" as the band spells out "LIONS." Just before the band swings into the musical instrument routine, the Alma Mater will be played. It will leave the field to the tune of "Victory."

The band left State College yesterday afternoon to attend an alumni smoker at 8:45 p.m. in the Hotel Warwick. This is the first of two off-campus appearances which the band will make this year.

The band will also play at the Pitt game Nov. 23.
