Our Neglected Parents

A Parents' Fund has been created as part of the Penn State Foundation, the University's fund-raising arm. Parents will be asked to subscribe to "shares" in the Stone Valley Recreation Area.

Here, among parents, lies a previously-untapped source of revenue for special projects such as Stone Valley.

This is fine, but the University should go one step further and establish a Parents' Association.

Of all the groups with a special interest in Penn State, the parents have been one of the most neglected. A Parents' Association would show them the University has an interest in them and the welfare of their children.

The members of the association could receive a news bulletin of things going on at Penn State. A governing executive committee could serve as an advisory group to the director of student affairs and the deans of men and women. Possibly we could have a Parents Day as well as a Band Day during the football season.

Even if only a thousand parents joined the association, it would be worth the University's time and money to establish it. In addition to getting money (probably more money since the parents would know they are wanted—not just a part of their checking accounts), the University would gain loyal supporters in hundreds of communities.

In other words, a Parents' Association would pay off in public relations as well as in dollars and cents.

The University has the right idea but needs to go one step further. The parents, we're sure, would appreciate it.

Someone's Agin' Us

Someone's agin' us. At least it appeared that way after reading our editorial, "Coeds and Their Ethics," yesterday morning in print.

We spent many hours for research on the editorial. We even spent several hours writing it. We had a difficult time keeping it coherent and finding the "right" word at places. But we thought we came up—finally—with a good editorial.

But when we read it in the paper yesterday morning we found paragraphs 7, 8, 9 and 10 were where paragraphs 4, 5 and 6 should have been.

As we said, someone's agin' us.
