

Eled Students Practice Teach 'Club TIM' Project Under Experimental System Will Await Survey

By DICK FISHER

Twenty-two students in elementary education are student teaching the second eight weeks of this semester under a new "experimental program."

The "experimental" group will not go to the usual "centers" to do their student teaching. They have gone to a school of their choice whose administration has agreed to the program.

Students have chosen schools so they can be at home or have the opportunity to teach where they intend to live.

The program also gives small-town students a chance to see life in a city while city students may go to rural schools.

Fifty-three others in elementary education are doing their student teaching in Lewistown and Coatesville this eight weeks.

A staff member serves as a coordinator for the groups that go to centers. The coordinator lives in the community with the student teachers from Tuesday until Friday of the weeks they are out.

He meets with the school faculty and student teachers and observes student teachers in classroom situations.

Students in the "experimental" group are responsible to the supervisor of the school where they are student teaching just as they would be as a full-time teacher.

Dr. E. Terry Schwartz, instructor in education, who is in charge of the program, will make one visit to each supervisor to discuss the students' progress.

The groups going to centers publish a report of what has been done by each student teacher.

Student teachers participate in Parent-Teacher Associations and faculty organizations as well as assist in sports programs and extra-curricular activities.

The other eight weeks of the semester are devoted to self-diagnosis and help in areas the student chooses. Students in the ed block meet with staff members best equipped to help them and with their coordinator to discuss these problems.

Do town independent men want a clubhouse of their own? This question—which has been discussed since a form of government for town independents was evolved—may be answered in the next two weeks after the Town Independent Men Council completes a telephone survey to determine how much interest exists for a "Club TIM".

The club, as the idea has been evolved, would consist of a converted private home with facilities for TIM's to study, have meetings, hold parties and would serve as a place to which alumni could return.

Charles Bartholemew, chairman of the Club TIM committee, said the survey will be of the "spot" variety, with names to be taken at random from the student directory.

Each student will be asked whether he favors such an idea and also if he would serve on a committee or contribute financially if such support is needed.

According to Bartholemew, the biggest stumbling blocks to the idea are an apparent lack of interest and a means of obtaining the funds necessary for such a project.

Since no definite ideas have been formulated, the financial situation has not been considered fully. Bartholemew said this will be looked into when the council has begun to initiate the plan.

If enough interest is indicated, the committee, with the approval of TIM Council, plans to begin to search for a house which it can buy, providing it has obtained a way of financing it.

Bartholemew said as a last resort, the council will rent a house. But a rented house would mean a yearly financial drain and the possibility of a fall-off in interest in any one year. This could result in the loss of the house after extensive labor and money had been invested, he said.

According to present indefinite plans, the upstairs of the club would be rented to town independents on a first-come basis which would help support the project.

The first floor would be remodeled into a study and a television room. The basement would be made into a large meeting room which could also be used for parties on weekends.

The club also would provide a place to keep trophies won by TIM groups in University competition or in competition among themselves.

Liberal Arts Faculty Approves 3 New Journalism Courses

The Liberal Arts faculty has approved the addition of three new courses by the School of Journalism.

The suggested courses must be approved by the University Senate.

The new courses mainly will affect graduate students.

They include:

•Comparative Foreign Journalism, 405, a 2-hour seminar emphasizing freedom, government control and ethics of mass communications in foreign countries.

•Studies in the History and Literature of Journalism, 508, which includes readings and research in history and the study of collections of journalistic writings and critical works.

•Contemporary Advertising Problems, 540, dealing with current problems and trends in advertising with consideration of policies and ethical standards.

Seniors to Order Caps, Gowns

Students who will receive a degree in January in the Colleges of Engineering, Education and Agriculture may sign for caps and gowns Monday and Tuesday at the Athletic Store.

The deposit on the cap and gown for seniors is $5. Graduate students must pay a $10 deposit on cap, gown and hood. Hat size must be given.

Announcements and invitations may be ordered at the Hetzel Union desk on the same days for ten cents each.

Persons planning to be graduated in military uniform need not sign for cap and gown.

Three suggested course changes in the school were also approved. They include changing Advertising Campaigns, 43, to a 443 course thereby making it open to graduate students; changing the present 3-credit course: The Press, It's Critics and Ethics, to a 2-credit course entitled, Ethics of the Mass Media, in order to broaden its scope to include radio, television and magazines.

Another change would be in Advanced Reporting, 424, to Public Affairs Reporting. This would include writing and interpreting news in specialized fields such as government, labor and business.

The dropping of three other courses was approved. They are Advanced Copy Reading 416; Seminar in Pennsylvania Press History, 504; and Seminar in Legal Problems in Freedom of the Press, 568. The courses would be dropped because of "lack of a demand for them."

Tunisia Aid--

British arms here today. Tunisia's top brass, as well as civilian officials, were on hand to see the weapons carted off promptly in army trucks. A U.S. plane arrived 16 hours later with the American-supplied assistance.

For months, Bourguiba has been pressing the West for arms for his 6000-man army. He has claimed only 3000 of his men had rifles, and that some were down to three cartridges apiece.

He has threatened to turn to other sources—presumably Communist Russia—for his needs.

Daily Military Inspections Carried Work Penalties

At the turn of the century there was a daily military inspection of both dress and rooms.

If the room were untidy or the shoes needed polishing, the offenders got a notice on the bulletin board, each such report carrying a penalty to be worked off on the following Saturday.

tion or in competition among themselves.

Bartholemew said the dean of men has approved the idea as such, but final approval will not be forthcoming until he receives a concrete plan.

Bartholemew has asked students not included in the survey who would be interested in working on the project to contact him at AD 7-3240 or at a TIM Council meeting.

Observatory Head To Give Lecture

John W. Findlay, who is in charge of the National Radio Astronomy Observatory at Green Bank, W. Va., will speak on "Radio Astronomy" at 7:15 p.m. Tuesday in the Hetzel Union auditorium.

Findlay, a member of Associated Universities, Inc., will address a joint meeting of the Institute of Radio Engineers, the American Institute of Electrical Engineers and the Electrical Engineering Society.
