

LA Faculty Divided; Euwema Refuses Comment on ROTC

Ben Euwema, dean of the College of the Liberal Arts, yesterday refused to comment on the current ROTC-Civil Defense question in a spot survey of the LA faculty.

Leonides OK's Required CD For Women

Leonides Council voted 16 to 7 in favor of a compulsory civil defense program for women.

The council did not discuss compulsory ROTC for women, however.

The consensus of council members was that civil defense is important today more than ever for preparing coeds to assume roles of leadership in the community civil defense programs.

Some council members felt the program should not be two years long and that it should be incorporated into the physical education schedule in place of health, not in addition to it. It was pointed out, however, that the present health program is a state requirement.

The civil defense motion was made by Daunna Doebler, sophomore in art education from Jersey Shore.

Barbara Barniker, sophomore in education from Harwick, and Nancy Rothwell, sophomore in journalism from Harrisburg, were appointed co-chairmen of the Housemother's Tea, sponsored by Leonides between Thanksgiving and Christmas.

But some other members of the faculty expressed divided opinions on three specific questions: "Should a school of Military Science and Civil Defense be established in the LA college?" "What is your opinion of the rest of the Senate committee report which proposed a compulsory 2-year ROTC-CD program for all students?" "Do you believe compulsory military training, as it is now, should be continued?"

In a strong dissent, Dr. Neal Riemer, associate professor of political science, said of the plan to put the ROTC departments in the LA college, "Let us not prostitute the LA college by including something that is against the principle of liberal thinking."

He expressed the opinion that if citizenship education is to be taught, courses in general education and the liberal arts will serve the purpose better than ROTC.

But Dr. Harold Nelson, associate professor of speech, said that if the ROTC departments were to be included in a college, the Liberal Arts would be as appropriate as any. Nelson also said compulsory ROTC should be continued. "With the grave international crisis I feel that young men should be trained in the military, and where is a better place than the university campus?" he said.

Nelson was joined by Dr. Louis Peck, professor of English composition, who could "see nothing wrong in a land-grant college or university having compulsory military training. He said if there were strong student and faculty opinion against it, it should be discontinued, but "I have not noticed

Students Fined for Insulting Policeman Over PA System

Two University students yesterday found out the hard way that insulting a policeman while he is within hearing range just doesn't pay.

Joseph Kravit, junior in arts and letters from New Brunswick, N.J., and Peter Duncan, sophomore in arts and letters from Malvern, were fined for insulting a borough police officer with a loud speaker set up in Duncan's room.

Kravit and Duncan paid fines of $21.50 each after a hearing before Justice of the Peace Guy E. Mills on a disorderly conduct charge.

Mills said that Kravit and Duncan connected the loud speaker to a phonograph and transmitter and placed the speaker out of the window. They then "called insulting remarks" to a police officer on duty at the corner of Pugh street and College avenue, Mills said.

State College Police Chief John R. Juba was notified of the action at the HUB desk. The price of and apprehended the students.
