

AIM OK's Clause Prohibiting Cabinet Vote Against Policy

The Association of Independent Men Board of Governors last night voted 18-5-2 to keep in its new constitution a clause prohibiting the AIM representative to All-University Cabinet from voting against a stated policy of the board.

The vote came in the form of a motion to delete the section of the revised constitution the board returned to committee for further revision.

The board also defeated a motion to include an article requiring the AIM president to have had two semesters experience on the board before his election.

On the power of the Cabinet representative from AIM, which is automatically the association's president, James Wambold, president of Town Independent Men said if the board sits at meetings and discusses policy for two or three hours, it would not be fair for the representative to directly oppose the outcome of this discussion.

John Rhodes, acting parliamentarian, said the representative should not be a messenger service. "We elect a representative to represent and to make up his own mind on a situation if so needed," Rhodes said.

The experience requirement motion was presented by Jacob Hostettler, who at the last AIM meeting, spoke in favor of requiring some experience before being eligible for office of the president.

from TIM, asked why the group should exclude a man who could be the best qualified simply because he had no experience on the board or other AIM groups.

He said the only experience for the presidency is the presidency. A representative from West Halls told the group it is a "shame" that an organization should have to suffer while the inexperienced president is "learning the ropes."

He pointed out that a president without experience caused confusion and handicapped the entire organization.

Decision Reversed: Caution Light Kept

The Borough Traffic Commission has reversed itself on a previous recommendation to Borough Council to install a manually-operated four-way traffic light at Hillcrest Avenue and N. Atherton Street.

The commission approved instead a substitute recommendation to continue use of the present blinking yellow caution light now at the intersection.

Children attending the College Heights Elementary School will be directed across the street by a school guard. The recommendation to use the manually-operated traffic light was made to better protect children crossing the intersection.

Rhodod will probably drop out of school for this semester, his mother said. Although his parents said it will be "Tom's decision," they said he would probably "take it easy" for the rest of the year and return to the University next semester.

Congestion Relieved By New Center

The Harrisburg College Center, which is partially operated by the University, and Wilkes College in Wilkes-Barre have been called notable successes that offer possible outs for Pittsburgh and other cities in the growing rush for higher education.

The Harrisburg center, a unique cooperative "farm" venture of four established colleges, admitted 799 students for the fall semester.

Wilkes College had admitted 1600 for the fall semester. It operates on a policy of taking every qualified local student.

Other colleges which operate the Harrisburg center are Temple University, Elizabethtown College and Lebanon Valley College.

Courses include chemistry (for industrial workers), accounting (for bank employees), engineering (for graduate engineers) and the usual business courses.

The center has drawn the interest of educators from all parts of the country, according to Dean Howard Kreitzer, of Lebanon Valley College.

Walker Cites Need for Public Funds

President Eric A. Walker last night called upon the people to support financially the University's expansion and basic research programs.

Speaking before the Pottsville alumni, Walker also pointed out that the University is "under terrific pressure" to provide extension service for the benefit of labor, social service, small businessmen and business management, which, he said, are legitimate claims on education.

Programmatic research, Walker said, is supported to a great degree by industries and interests which derive benefit from its findings. But basic research, he said, which is equally important, does not receive such support and must depend on public funds.

Basic research's contributions to national defense, Walker said, are hard to visualize, since they become practical only after a need is developed by programmatic research. But he stressed basic research is no less important.

The atom bomb, the atomic submarine and industrial atomic power, while now in the stage of programmatic research and development, are children of basic research.

Because business and industrial sources "demand, and have a right to demand, that research supported by them be directed at their interests and for their benefit," Walker said, support for basic research must come from public funds, the only other source available.

Extension, too, Walker said, must be supported by public funds. He said the University, unlike a business, has no funds to invest in expansion. This money must come from the state, he said.

In 10 to 15 years, he predicted, the University's enrollment will increase by at least 50 per cent, both because of a greater number of college-age students and the private colleges' refusal to expand.

The $2.29 per capita for public higher education, he said, is too low to meet this future need. This need will be met, he said, only if the state embraces "the western concept of public higher education to a far greater extent than it has previously."

The average per capita expenditure for the midwestern states, he said, is $8.56 and that for the 11 far western states $12.52.

The people of Pennsylvania, Walker urged, must therefore know the job the University is doing and the problem it faces so they will be prompted to meet the need.
