

Exact Death Time On Baby 'Unlikely'

Dr. Charles Cullen, Centre County coroner, said yesterday it will be almost impossible to place the exact time of death of the baby which was found Saturday behind Nittany Lion Inn.

Although the definite time to the hour probably will not be determined, Cullen said it "won't be that difficult that we won't get it pretty close."

Thomas Hollander, senior class president: "In 1951, 46 per cent of the nation's ROTC cadets were enrolled in schools having compulsory programs, while the other 54 per cent were in voluntary ones. The compulsory programs produced 66 per cent of the nation's ROTC officers, while the voluntary programs produced only 34 per cent."

James Stratton, Mineral Industries Student Council president, said he felt the extra time a student would gain from not having to take ROTC would enable him to learn more about his scientific and other specialty, and become more valuable to defense since "the only way we can prevent a third world war is through scientific and diplomatic progress."

Robert Stroup, Engineering and Architecture Student Council president, maintained that a future conflict would not be a push-button war and would "not be fought in outer space but by human beings locked in a land struggle."

Dr. Neal Riemer, associate professor of political science, said he has "grave doubts that the ROTC program can advance citizenship objectives." He said, "We should train college students not just for waging war, but for waging peace."

Wrigley said while "there are some faults" in the ROTC courses, the Air Force program is designed to teach the student why he must serve in the military, the history and importance of the Air Force, world geography, reasons behind world tension, methods for better evaluation of the press, and the place of military aviation.

The coroner and state police still are awaiting release of a pathologist's autopsy report on the body. The report was due yesterday according to state police but Cullen said this sort of examination "takes a long time."

The coroner said he expected the report tomorrow.

Cullen said a specific pinpointing of the time of death is particularly difficult in this case because the different weather factors have worked on the body. Since the baby was placed in a shallow grave covered with ground and leaves, Cullen said, it was somewhat preserved.

Dr. Anacleto Hermogenes of Williamsport performed the autopsy and is making tests of body samples he took when he examined the dead infant earlier this week in Centre County Hospital, Bellefonte.

The main factor expected to be uncovered in the autopsy is the time of the death. Police, who have been questioning persons at random, said the approximate time of death would enable them to query anyone who was around the Inn at that time.

Be an Angel Give an Angel...

The easiest way to earn your halo is to give an angel from our "heavenly" collection—There's one just for you to give or to keep as your own cherished possession, from our Gabrielle (suspended in the window) to the tiniest white porcelain one.

Each of the little porcelain ones plays a different musical instrument—flute, accordion, trumpet... they start at just $.85.

Pour la Boudoir

Charming is the only word for our apothecary jars, for these are not ordinary ones. They are filled with luscious fragrances. The sweet perfume comes from the preserved flower buds... roses, lavender and pot pourri (a mixture). The buds have maintained their natural color and fragrance. For use as a sachet or an ornament in la boudoir.

Party, Party

This weekend starts another series of what I could do without until after finals... PARTIES. I'm just trying to be conscientious of course, I love parties. And this weekend I too will be among the crowds.

If you're intending to fascinate the Penn State males by your appearance at this weekend's festivities, why not really look stunning with a new pair of black dress shoes from Simon's. A pair of new black satin or suede Mannequins or Mademoiselles will do wonderful things to your favorite party dress (this weekend, and all throughout the Christmas and the New Year festivities). I won't even try to describe these sophisticated creations—just peek in Simon's window and see what I mean.

Since Penn State Winter is here you might also want to look at Simon's dress boots, lightweight black nylon, perfect for over all your heels. Stop into Simon's today.
