

Library Displays Catalog Production

The production of a Penn State general catalog, from the first draft to the finished copy, is shown in one of the display cases in the Pattee Library.

The red-penciled first draft is retyped for the printer, who runs off galley proofs. The proofs are pasted on a dummy and page proofs are made up. The catalog's cover is made from an etched magazine plate.

The display cases also contain newspaper articles and wire service releases about the University's planned expansion. The articles are taken from papers in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Harrisburg, Altoona, and smaller papers.

News photographs about the University are the subject of another display. These include President Eric A. Walker's family congratulating him before his inauguration as University president and two coeds collecting money for the Larry Sharp fund.

On the "pin-up" side, one case features Miss Penn State of 1957, the former Sally Lou Rolston, now Mrs. Thomas Goas. Mrs. Goas, a senior in secondary education, is one of the finalists for the Sports magazine's campus queen.

Pamphlets and programs are featured in three other cases.

Lawther to Teach At Peru Institute

Dr. John D. Lawther, associate dean of the College of Physical Education and Athletics will go to Lima, Peru, in June to spend six months under a Fulbright grant as a lecturer at the National Institute of Physical Education.

Lawther will advise the staff in the reorganization and expansion of the new curriculum. He will help establish a department of graduate studies and train two Peruvian professors who will serve as his assistants and will be able to continue his work after his departure.

Students—Check Suitcase Switch

If your suitcase is full of booties instead of sweaters, you may have the wrong bag.

Mrs. Robert McMichael exchanged her suitcase of baby clothes with a student's bag at 4 p.m. Saturday in Lewistown. The student who has Mrs. McMichael's suitcase may contact her by calling 1028-W in Malverne, collect.

Gymnastics—

Cumiskey talking, "As you know, I gave Foht the winning score (an 85). I wouldn't argue with the other judges if McNutt beat him. Of course he (McNutt) did have two breaks in his routine and he worked even faster than Foht."

Brindley Receives Grant To Finance Research

Dr. George W. Brindley, professor and head of the Department of Ceramic Technology, has received a grant-in-aid of $10,000 from the American Chemical Society.

The grant will finance a study of the formation, structure and properties of clay-organic complexes.

Skinner, Chomicky Comment On Abstract Painting Exhibit

The pictures are gone but the controversy lingers on. The Sidney Janis exhibit which had been in the Hetzel Union Building for the past three weeks was taken down Sunday but student and faculty members still seem to have something to say about it.

Leon D. Skinner, assistant professor of English composition and assistant to the dean of the College of the Liberal Arts, expressed it this way in a letter to the Centre Daily Times Saturday:

"The abstract art that we see in the HUB is just a part of the entire School of the Arts program, and why it should be singled out for special attention is more than I can understand. Why not violent letters against the ballet, against Chopin, against Dave Brubeck. I personally hate the Dave Brubeck kind of jazz with an all-consuming hatred, but I do not try to convince everybody else that he should hate it too."

Yar Chomicky, assistant professor of art education said:

"This exhibit, like most exhibits brought to the campus, was possible through the generosity of a private collector willing to share a portion of his collections with the general public. This particular exhibit represented a single area of art form and concept on the current American scene. In no way does it, or any exhibit for that matter, reflect prejudice or preference or insinuate that it is the only acceptable art. It is a provocative statement of our day."

"I wasn't impressed," said John Tullar, senior in liberal arts from Albany. "I don't know what they're attempting. It's still a good outline for a doodle."

William Swaneey, graduate student in art education from Tarentum, said, "It gives the impression that that's the way everyone is painting today which isn't true. Realistic paintings are being done which are even better."

"I liked a few of them particularly," said Gary Grove, freshman in pre-medicine from Johnstown. "I liked the large black-and-white picture. It used to hit you right as you walked in."
