

LA Tables Motion On E Comp 1

A motion that incoming freshmen who cannot qualify for English Composition 1 be advised against enrolling in the College of the Liberal Arts has been tabled by Liberal Arts faculty members.

The motion was made Thursday by Dr. A. Bruce Sutherland, professor of English literature.

Dr. Robert T. Oliver, professor of speech, said he thought the motion was far too important to be acted on hastily and moved to table it.

Oliver said he would like to see similar recommendations covering speech, mathematics and other basic abilities.

The faculty also approved 27 courses including five courses under the School of the Arts which were objected to by Dr. Harold E. Dickson, professor of history of art and architecture.

Dickson said he had not seen the proposed courses and that the question was whether all art changes ought not to be discussed in meetings of the art faculty.

George S. Zoretich, assistant professor of art, said the courses had been discussed and approved by the section of the school concerned, the studio section.

The faculty then defeated 47 to 48 a motion made by William L. Werner, professor of American literature, to table all School of the Arts courses included in the list of new courses.

The faculty also approved a revised program for English Composition 2 using literary works as a basis for compositions.

A motion made by Dr. Philip A. Shelley, professor of German and comparative literature, to limit the literary works used to American and English works was defeated.

The motion was defeated after Dr. John S. Bowman, professor of English composition, said in a speech applauded by the faculty that the purpose of the course was to make students understand and express ideas, regardless of the nationality of the works' originator.

WUS to Conduct 1st Drive To Aid Medical Trust Fund

World University Service, a former member of the dissolved Campus Chest, will conduct its first independent fund raising campaign from April 18 through 26.

Organized after World War I, WUS is an organization of "students for students" dedicated to meeting the crucial needs of the university community throughout the world, credos is "Their future is our future."

"That learning may not die, WUS has provided student medical assistance in Greece, student housing units in Lebanon and Israel, student tuberculosis wards in Japan and Korea and, recently, food and supplies for Hungarian refugees.

This year the proceeds from the campus campaign will be allocated to the African Medical Scholarships Trust Fund. The dearth of doctors in the Union of South Africa is called extreme. Tuberculosis claims 15,000 lives per year, and only one doctor serves each 40,000. Although the 9,000,000 Africans comprise 70 per cent of the Union of South Africa population, they are the most disease-ridden.

The mortality rate of African infants is 20 to 30 per cent, compared to the white rate of 3 per cent. Life expectancy of the surviving Negro child is 36.4 years, contrasted with the white expectancy of 66 years.

Only 160 non-white doctors practice among these people. The average African family in Johannesburg would have to exceed its income by $21 per month to maintain health and sanitation conditions, according to WUS.
