

Briton Will Discuss Atom Disarmament

Sir Stephen King-Hall, advocate of British unilateral nuclear disarmament will be the guest speaker at a University Christian Association sponsored dinner meeting at 6 tonight at the State College Hotel.

Sir Stephen King-Hall
Disarmament Advocate

King-Hall will speak on "Defense in the Nuclear Age," the title of his book published in March. In the book, King-Hall, a retired British navy commander, urges Britain to undertake unilateral nuclear disarmament to keep the world from total war and the resultant total destruction.

According to the author, passive resistance is the only realistic means of defense presently available. Maintaining that his position is not that of a pacifist, but that of an objective examiner of the practical military, political and ideological problems involved, King-Hall's viewpoint is the subject of much present controversy in Britain. J. B. Priestley says of the novel, "Although I don't agree with everything in it, I hope it sells a million copies."

After Sir Stephen's speech, faculty panel members of different viewpoints will question his proposals. Panel members are: Dr. Vernon Aspaturian, assistant professor of political science; Captain J. P. Roach, professor of naval science; Dr. James J. Fritz, associate professor of chemistry; Dr. Rustom Roy, professor of geochemistry.

The public may attend the post-dinner lecture and discussion beginning at 7:15 p.m.

guys and pretend they never committed their crimes."

I say, fine! Let's bury the hatchet. But let's not pretend the war crimes were never committed. No amount of pussyfooting is going to erase the number of people who died in gas chambers, furnaces and filthy concentration camps.

The philosophy I would like to see behind war stories is that one in Luigi Zampa's "To Live in Peace." Made in 1946, the film suggested that all men—even Nazis—could live together in friendship if they followed their instincts rather than their ideologies.

This is a philosophy, with which anyone may agree or disagree. But it is certainly not a flagrant misrepresentation of facts.

Still Waiting??

...the monsoons will arrive soon enough!

... and they'll come for quite a stay, any Penn Stater who has been around awhile would hasten to add. But the Gobel twins (extreme l. and r.) and their sorority sisters are ready to smile away the wettest of rainy days in their Bal McAnn raincoats. What's a little rain—or a lot!—when you're wearing a Bal McAnn!

Penn State coeds know that State College rain waits for no-one. If you're not set for the season, do stop in to see Charles' line of Bal McAnns, in natural tan. Sizes 7-15, 6-16. With matching hats.
