

4 Couples Make Finals In Contest

The University has placed four couples in the finals of the Mr. and Mrs. Contest being sponsored by the Junior Women's Club.

The only student among the group is Nicholas Spangler, senior in metallurgy from Clarion. He and his wife are sponsored by the Penn State Dames.

Robert J. Thomas in charge of the soil test laboratory and his wife are sponsored by the American Legion. David C. Whitmarsh Jr., associate professor of engineering research, and his wife are sponsored by the Ordnance Research Laboratory and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Sauer, sponsored by the Alpha Fire Company, round out the campus contingent.

The winning couple, to be selected out of ten finalists tonight at the women's club show, will be determined by a graduated system of penny voting. The system is graduated in that a one dollar bill will count more than 100 pennies.

Among the winners' prizes will be a two-week vacation in Florida and a wardrobe.

Hat Styles Change For New Fashions

Spring fashions call for a change in hat styles, say extension clothing specialists of the University.

Soft, pliable hats of the same fabric as the dress will be popular. For the chemises a hat with depth and height will be best. Most popular with this new dress style are the turban and cloche. Off-the-face lines complement the relaxed, loose fashions.

Bretons of all sizes, three-cornered hats, and wide-brimmed hats with huge, colorful flowers also are smart for spring.

Purses Resemble Envelopes

The purses for spring have that envelope shape—compact, tidy and slim. The pint-size clutch bag is popular in black patent leather, printed linen or bright blue calf.

One Plus One Can Equal Disaster

Nothing could be more stylish than an orange-checked chemise. And nothing could look more like spring than those yummy flower-bedecked shoes. But put them together, and the result is social catastrophe.

A faux pas of this magnitude would be rare, but more minor sins—both of omission and commission—are not. Both navy blue and sand are popular colors this season, but they don't have to be worn with that old standby, red. Try black patent leather with navy, or wear different shades of sand at the same time, without matching dress to bag, bag to shoes, and so on.

And speaking of red, too much of it at one time can make you look like a huge scarlet tomato. Add accessories of black, string or navy blue to provide relief.

Two of the season's favorite colors also could receive awards as being hardest to handle. Vivid pink and orange are both turning up more and more frequently.

The trick with pink is to tone it down, or you'll be lost in the blaze of color. White, for instance, would add to the intensity, so try sand or black accessories. Orange looks richest when worn with yellow, beige, or coral.

If you haven't the courage to wear such flaming hues, pale green may be what you're looking for. This soft, lady-like hue should be treated gently, and teamed with bone-beige, wicker-tan and white. Bright green and shades of blue can be combined with happy results.

Spring is the time for color, and this spring the sky's the limit. Use your imagination and your suppressed desire to wear bright splashes of color. But while you're mixing the colors, be sure to add a generous amount of good old common sense.

Hats Connected To Personality

A new hat to change a mood may be more than just a trite saying.

It may reveal the realization that the clothes a person wears make a difference in what others think of them as well as their own recognition of the person they really are.

Dr. Marjorie East, professor and head of the Department of Home Economics Education, will talk on "Reality, Recognition and Raiment" at the ninth annual Home Economics Spring Weekend April 18 and 19.

She will illustrate her talk on the link between clothes and personality.

Dr. East is the author of "Display for Learning" and co-author of a text for clothing and textiles.

For a romantic look in hats, try small fake flowers wreathed around green net. It's perfect for spring and summer.
