

Return of Statues Asked by Dickson

Dr. Harold E. Dickson, professor of the history of art and architecture, has said that "the least the University can do" is restore the two controversial George Gray Barnard statues, The Hewer and Rising Woman, to their proper place.

The statues stood in Schwab Auditorium until July 1955 when they were removed to the University salvage dump.

Eng Council To Evaluate Professors

The Engineering and Architecture Student Council has voted to institute a faculty evaluation program similar to those in other colleges of the University.

The program would provide for mimeographed questionnaires designed to evaluate each professor and his course. The sheets would be distributed by individual professors and filled in by their students.

The council also decided Tuesday to study the present faculty advisor system and try to initiate a new program leading to a more beneficial student-advisor relationship.

A total of $300 will be donated to the Penn State Engineer to help pay for the publication and mailing of its annual high school issue. Copies of the magazine were sent to guidance counselors in every state high school.

The Council also donated $10 to the World University Service Committee.

An Honors Day Program will be published again this year. The booklet contains the names of students who have received scholarships and awards and members of engineering and architecture honor societies.

Marketing Group To Elect Officers

The Marketing Club will meet at 7:30 tonight at Theta Xi to elect officers.

Speakers at the meeting will be Thomas Kerr and Robert Bower of the Nittany Office Equipment Co. They will demonstrate methods of selling office equipment.

Graduating seniors in the club will meet at 7 p.m. to set up nominations for the elections.

Handbook Candidates

Students interested in working on the Student Handbook may apply today and tomorrow at the Hetzel Union desk.
