Harris and his wife Johanna, a pianist, will conduct a workshop at 3 p.m. Tuesday in 117 Carnegie, and Mrs. Harris will present a piano recital at 8 p.m. Tuesday in the Mineral Science Auditorium.

Harris is composer-in-residence at the School of Music, Indiana University. He is a composer, writer, lecturer, music critic and teacher.

Harris' Seventh Symphony has been recorded by Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Contractors Fence In Open Spaces

By JEFF POLLACK
Everyone knows that the wide open spaces of Penn State—such as existed in the days of the Farmers High School—are gone.

But whatever open pasture land does exist on campus is now being divided by a hoard of squatter contractors. Never has one university had so many high hurdle men.

All along College Avenue, the University is being contained—by a fence. From Burrowes Street to the Mall a wooden fence has been built to protect sidewalk superintendents from injury as work continues on the Hammond Engineering Building.

Having been successful in stopping outside interference from the south, the Hammond contractors have set about securing themselves from the other three directions. Result—a fenced-in area north of Sackett Building, on the site of the new wing, a fence along Burrowes Street to the Mechanical Engineering Building and a complete corral on the parking lot behind the engineering units.

But ingenious men never stop—so they built a fence between Engineering Units C and D to keep students away during working hours. The fence can be taken down at night.

Another squatter creation is the huge corral-like fence behind the Home Economics South Building. The fence encloses the entire area to be occupied by the two wings to be added to the building. This man-made pedestrian control extends from the little Mall almost to the Atherton Hall driveway.

But greedy men are never

Exposition Features Crowning of Queen

A calf-leading contest and the crowning of a dairy queen are the special events scheduled for the 33rd Annual Dairy Exposition to be held from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today at the livestock pavilion.

Staff members and students will compete to see who can lead a young calf in a straight line the longest distance in 15 seconds. The winner will receive one-half quart of ice cream.

Virginia Kirkwood, junior in education from Philadelphia, was chosen dairy queen by the Dairy Science Club, sponsors of the exposition.

About 60 students have been preparing for the cattle fitting and showing contest during the past weeks. They drew lots for cows six weeks ago and today will be judged on how well the animals have been groomed and trained.

One grand champion and one reserve champion fitter and showman will be chosen from each of the five breeds of cows being shown. These finalists will compete in the afternoon when a grand champion fitter and showman will be named for the whole exposition.

The dairy department has donated cheese, butter and other products to be raffled off at 3:15 p.m. today. Chances will be sold during the first half of the show.

Awards will be presented to winners of all events which have been held during the week at a banquet at Penns Valley High School tonight.

Also part of the exposition is a dairy cattle judging contest held May 3. The winners of the professional class were Glenn Klippenstein, junior in animal husbandry from Bryn Athyn, first; Samuel Minor, sophomore in agriculture economics and rural sociology from Carmichael; and William Haugh, sophomore in dairy science from Brookville, tied for second place; Ralph Forsht, junior in science from Duncansville took fourth and Paul Schonbacher, senior in dairy science from Wilkensburg, was fifth.
