Canada Seen to Be In Midst of Surge

By BILL JAFFE

Canada is in the midst of the greatest economic surge in its history and its population has increased five million since World War II, Charles J. Woodsworth, Canadian consul-general in New York, said Wednesday night.

Woodsworth, editor-in-chief of the Ottawa Citizen from 1949 to 1955 and now a member of the Canadian Foreign Service, said Canadians are now in a period of "deep economic thrust and deep thinking."

Woodsworth's speech was sponsored by the Social Science Research Center.

"Canada is facing the same recession or economic setback that has hit the United States, but an underlying spirit of confidence and buoyancy has kept it from setbacks," Woodsworth said. Different challenges and responses are now facing Canadians than those in the past, he said.

There has been tremendous mining and industrial development in the northwest of Canada and the nation has shifted from an agricultural country to a mining one, Woodsworth said. "A few years ago the northwest was an area of unbroken woodlands, but now it is a thriving center of mining and construction," the consul-general said.

"Rich deposits of iron ore, nickel, uranium, oil and silver have been found in the sparsely settled northwest," Woodsworth said, "and the St. Lawrence Seaway Project has had considerable economic impact on the nation."

A railway is being constructed to Great Slave Lake to tap one of the world's richest nickel deposits, and someday Americans will be able to motor from Mexico to the Arctic Ocean as new roads are being built in the Hudson Bay region, he said.

"Canada has taken longer to reach maturity and is in its third great period of expansion," Woodsworth said in comparing economic developments of the United States and Canada. There have been no great "western" movements or surges as there were in American history, he said.

The different geography and climate of Canada has made the Canadians wait until scientific developments were completed to aid them in their surge westward, Woodsworth said.

"Canada has always felt a nearness to Europe and Great Britain and conducts much of its trade with nations abroad," Woodsworth said. The history of the U.S. shows an isolationist period and then a new approach to foreign relations, he said, and that is one of the basic differences between the two countries.

"We couldn't want better or more friendlier neighbors than the Americans," Woodsworth said. The present economic difficulties lie with the bigness and power of the U.S. and its high tariff rates, he said.

Professional Advice Needed On Barnard Statues — Dickson

By LUCY THIESSEN

"It is time we seek professional advice," said Dr. Harold E. Dickson, professor of art and architectural history, concerning the plaster casts of George Grey Barnard's statues which still remain at the University salvage dump where the statues were placed after their removal from Schwab Auditorium in 1955.

Dickson, in an interview, recommended that an expert be brought to campus to look at the statues and decide whether they are worth repairing. He suggested Mr. Heinz Warneke, sculptor of the Nittany Lion, as a possibility.

If the statues are considered worth repairing by such an expert, serious steps should be taken to find a place to put them, Dickson said.

"The Hewer" formerly was permanently placed in the center of the lobby of Schwab Auditorium and was surrounded by a brass railing.

"Rising Woman" had been displayed in the second floor gallery of old Old Main until the building was torn down. The statue was then moved into a corner of the Schwab lobby "because there was no other place to put it," Dickson said. "She was out of place there," Dickson said, "but the Hewer was not, at that time."

Frank Neusbaum, professor of theatre arts, said that although it had nothing to do with the quality of the art, the two pieces were "awfully big for the size of the lobby."

The box office had been placed in front of the center of three sets of doors in the lobby, since there was no other place for it with the statues there. Keeping this set of doors locked was against the fire laws, Neusbaum said. The statues don't belong in Schwab any more than in any other building here, he said.

The Reverend Luther H. Harshbarger, University chaplain, said that the statues were grotesque, and added no beauty to the lobby. "They became coat hangers for chapel-goers," he said.

George S. Zoretich, associate professor of art, said that since the statues were original plasters they had historical importance. However he felt that much has been done in sculpture since that time.

Francis E. Hyslop, professor of history of art and architecture, said that other plaster casts would cost quite a bit, and original marbles or bronzes probably couldn't be bought by the University.

Sophomore Is Elected Jazz Club President

Peter Duncan, sophomore in arts and letters from Malvern, has been elected president of the Penn State Jazz Club.

Other officers are George Hostetter, vice president; Norman Breneman, treasurer; Carol Heckman, secretary; Brenda Vogel, alumni secretary; and Thomas Lattomus, historian.
