

Construction, Voting Top Spring News

TEMPERATURES in the low teens in February caused many a student to end up in this position. During the second week of February, the mercury never got above the 25 degree mark.

FIRE swept the Delta Theta Sigma fraternity house early on the morning of Feb. 19, leaving the inside gutted. Thirty-five men were forced out into bitter cold temperatures clad only in pajamas and blankets.

FRISBEE hit the campus early in the spring. Winds played havoc with this couple's game, blowing the disk onto the roof of Redifer Hall.

GINGER OTTINGER shows surprise as she is chosen Miss Penn State during Spring Week.

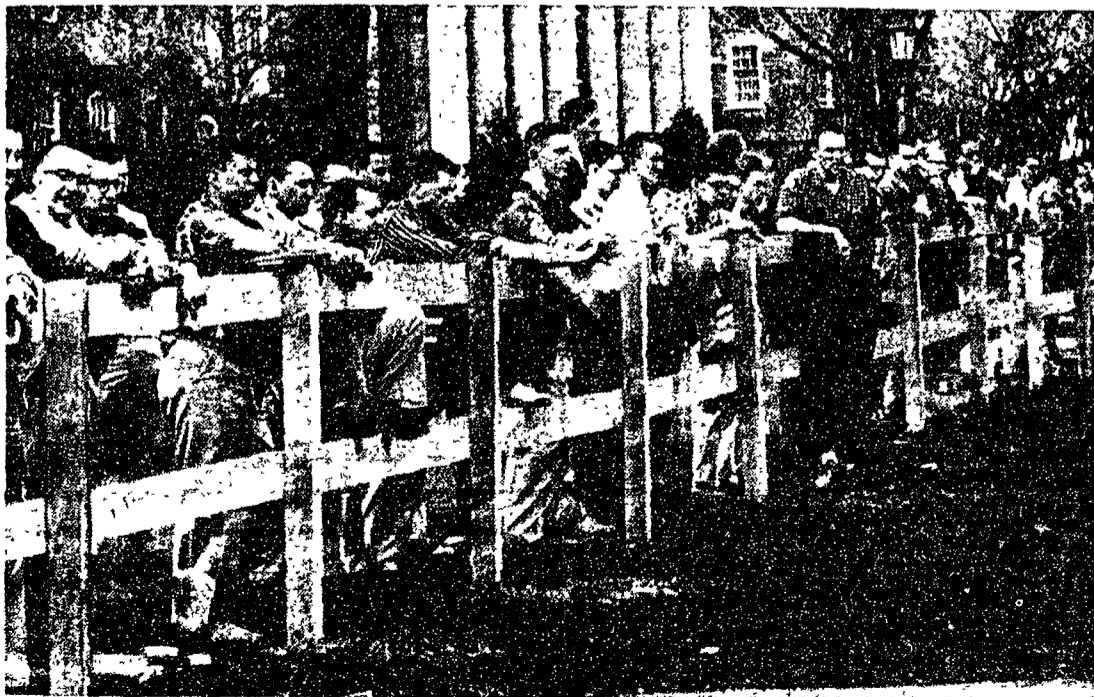

Campus-wide construction, an upset victory by a new political party, a panty raid . . . just a few of the spring's leading news stories.

Spring Week's festivities and the fellowship of Greek Week brought campus-wide interest, also.

Now, with frisbees safely packed, students prepare for the summer.

ALL-UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT Jay Feldstein is congratulated by his family after defeating John Bott in the spring elections. Feldstein ran with the newly formed University party, which swept all but one campus office.

WARM WEATHER and big machinery working on the new engineering building brought out the sidewalk superintendents in April. This group watches a bulldozer struggle with a giant tree next to the Sackett Building.

PANTY RAID in April at Women's Building brought the wrath of the administration upon the ringleaders. Two men were suspended. The coeds in the building were reprimanded by Dean of Women Pearl O. Weston for abetting the raid.
