

Coffee, Conversation Are HUB Features

No college campus is complete without one particular spot for students to meet for coffee, talking and dancing.

The University has provided a modern $2.75 million brick, stone and plate glass building near the center of campus to answer this need.

The Hetzel Union Building, more commonly abbreviated the HUB, was named in honor of the late Dr. Ralph Dorn Hetzel, president of the University from 1926 till his death in 1947. The building was opened in 1955 during the University's celebration of its centennial anniversary.

The main floor of the building is devoted to areas for lounges, reading rooms, art galleries, music rooms, a ballroom, an auditorium and the HUB desk which is a catch-all for lost and found, information, theatrical and musical ticket sales and notices of the many student activities.

The most popular feature of the ground floor is the Lions Den—true center of student social activity. The Lions Den is a combination snack bar, card room and dating bureau.

Facilities for table tennis, checkers, shuffle board and card games occupy another section of the ground floor.

At the beginning of the fall and spring semesters the HUB card room is used as a student Used Book Agency. A student-run supply and stationery store is also located on the ground floor in addition to the Terrace room, a cafeteria, open from 11:30 a.m. to 1:15 p.m. and from 4:45 to 6:45 p.m.

The campus post office is annexed to the ground floor using University Park as the mailing address.

The second floor of the HUB is used for student government offices and activity meeting rooms.

The use of the HUB's facilities is managed by William S. Fuller, director of associated student activities.

and lace gown with pearl and sequin applique and a sweetheart neckline. The back of her gown was accented with a slight bustle covered with small bows.

Miss Samley's very first step into the beauty pageant world came earlier this summer when she was selected as Miss Lehigh Valley as a candidate for the state competition for Miss Pennsylvania.

She became Miss Pennsylvania in the Longwood Gardens pageant in June. Now that the Miss America competition is over, Miss Samley will continue to fulfill her duties as Miss Pennsylvania with tours and personal appearances.

Miss Samley began dancing lessons when she was three years old. Last year she was choreographer and secretary of Thespians. She was also a member of the women's debate team.

President Welcomes New Students

since it was the only building, all 69 members of that first class and the entire faculty of three professors lived and attended classes in it. The "campus" was nothing but a bleak hillside decorated only by piles of debris left from the construction. State College did not exist, and the closest post office was located at Boalsburg.

Thick, heavy doors had been placed at the entrance to each row of student rooms so that they could be locked in the evenings to prevent the students from escaping their studies for lighter pursuits. This practice, however, was never enforced, since some parents objected that their sons would be roasted alive if there were a fire. Only one curriculum was offered, and each student was required to work three hours each day on the farm connected with the school. There were no laboratories, and the library consisted of a handful of useless and outdated books donated by interested citizens.

In these 100 years, Penn State has grown into one of the largest universities in the country. Your class numbers almost 3500 young men and women, and the original faculty of three professors has grown to a staff of 1700. You can select your field of study from among the almost 70 separate curricula offered through 10 different colleges. Old Main, a replacement of the original building, is but one of about 150 major buildings located on one of the most beautiful campuses in the country.

There are, you see, many differences. But there are also important similarities. We still have, as you will notice, unsightly piles of debris from new construction, the price we must pay for expanding the educational opportunity in Pennsylvania.

We still worry about students using their time wisely, but yet we do not resort to locked doors or other forced means to achieve this result. One hundred years ago, Penn State was operating at maximum capacity with its 69 students, just as it is today with its student body of approximately 14,000.

Most important of all, Penn State stands today, as it did then, as a pioneer in a new and dynamic type of education—an education designed to prepare young men and women for vital roles in the life of our country as mothers and fathers, as citizens of the Commonwealth and of the nation, and as members of a profession. You are the inheritors of a tradition formed by an unbroken succession of 100 Penn State classes.

According to this tradition, your years at Penn State will be a period of intense, exciting personal experience. It will be a time for exploring, for discovering, for sifting and comparing that which is known and that which is thought by man. It will be a time in which to develop a love of truth, a moral conviction that knowledge is requisite to freedom, and an intellectual conviction that education and scholarship are requisite to progress.

Yours will be the privilege and the responsibility of carrying this tradition into Penn State's second century. In this way, you share a spiritual bond with those 69 young men who ploughed through the mud up the hill to Old Main to start their classes in February 1859.

Good luck and best wishes to all of you.

Orientation Unit Members Pledge Aid

Ruth Johnson and Richard Friedman, student members of the Orientation Week committee, have written the following message welcoming new students: To the Class of '62:

Welcome to Penn State! A long-awaited moment has arrived—you are now college students.

This week that lies before you will be one of many new experiences, of enlightenment and adjustment. Everything has been planned for you, and with only you in mind. Take advantage of it.

There is a lot that you can learn about your new home, and many people want to help you. All of us associated with Orientation Week are at your service.

Your counselors have been specially chosen from the most active and best-informed students on campus. Please feel free to look us up and inquire about anything at any time. We are here to help you.

Again, welcome to our college community, and the best of luck throughout this week and all your college days.

Collegian Starts 54th Year

editorial staff. The other three editorial boards are Board of Advanced Reporters, Board of Intermediate Reporters and the Cub Reporters.

The advanced board assists the editors in the day-to-day operation of the paper, as well as covering regular beats and general reporting assignments.

The intermediate board works directly under the City Editor and the advanced reporters. Its members also cover regular beats.

The cubs are newcomers to the staff. They aid in writing stories and headlines for the paper and eventually move with time and accomplishment through the other three boards on The Collegian.

A call for reporters will be issued in The Collegian at a later time.

Published Tuesday through Saturday mornings, the regular 8-page tabloid is divided this way: Four pages to local and campus news, one page to AP news, one page to editorial comment (including Bibler and Peanuts) and two pages to sports news and columns.

The three departments of the business staff are advertising, circulation and promotion.

Both local and national advertising is handled by the "ad" staff.

The promotion staff handles Collegian publicity and the circulation staff distributes the paper to pick-up points.
