

'Community Living' Recalled by Library

A quick view of "Residence Halls at Penn State—With a Look at Community Living Past and Planned" is now available to students via an exhibit at the Pattee Library.

The exhibit, the first of several presented throughout the year, was arranged by the staff of the Penn State Collection with the cooperation of the housing department.

It consists of photographs, drawings, pamphlets and articles tracing the development of residence halls from the time when the upper floors of Old Main were the only student living quarters available.

Each residence hall is pictured from the time it was first built and opened for use. Clippings of newspaper articles announcing the opening of each new residence hall accompany the photographs.

In addition to the residence halls in use today the exhibit includes pictures of temporary housing—the track house, World War I housing barracks and the World War II Trailer Camp—which has since disappeared from the campus.

Architects' drawings and scale models of the new men's and women's residence halls in the South Halls area are also on display.

Library exhibits like the present one are on display almost constantly during the school year. They cover a large variety of subjects, all pertaining in some way to courses taught at the University and to the University itself.

The library consists of several reading rooms where books relating to various subjects are collected so students may find a large amount of material on any one subject easily.

Located on the first floor are reading rooms for education and psychology, arts, humanities and history and the social sciences. The book stacks are also on the

Record Number Enrolled For TV Classes

Enrollment in closed circuit television classes has reached 5443, an increase of more than 1000 over last fall.

This is the highest total enrollment in the television classes since they were first offered four years ago.

The program offers 18 classes in 15 different subjects. Televised courses include economics, meteorology, air science, archeology, German, mineral industries, music, psychology, sociology, zoology, accounting, anthropology, mathematics and commerce. Instruction in metallurgy and chemistry laboratories is also being televised.

The television instruction program was inaugurated in the spring of 1955 under a grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education. When it started, three courses were offered to 840 students. Enrollment exceeded the 5000 mark for the first time last spring when 5039 students participated.

Non-Credit Religion Courses Will Be Offered by U.C.A.

Six non-credit courses in religion will be offered for a ten-week period by the University Christian Association.

The courses will be taught for one hour weekly at the Program Center in the Helen Eakin Eisenhower Chapel.

The program of instruction is designed to give students an understanding of the Christian faith and of its significance for modern life and thought.

Course subjects, instructors and hours are as follows: "The Life and Teachings of Jesus the Christ," Miss Genevieve Dilts, associate director of UCA, at 4:15 p.m. Mondays; "The Bible in Perspective," Arthur Ruths, Lutheran pastor to students, at 4:15 p.m. Tuesdays; "A Faith to Share," Hal Leiper, associate director of U.C.A., at 4:15 p.m. Tuesdays; "Christian Ethics," Rev. Preston Williams, assistant chaplain, at 4:15 p.m. Wednesdays; "Existentialism and Theology," Sam N. Gibson, executive director of U.C.A., at 7 p.m. Wednesdays; "Christian Thought and Theology," Donald Cutler, Episcopal chaplain to students, at 4:15 p.m. Thursdays.

All students, regardless of religious affiliation, may sign up at the UCA office, in the Helen Eakin Eisenhower chapel. There is a $1 registration fee.
