

Queen to Visit

Greek Sovereign Beloved by People

By CATHY FLECK
Her majesty Queen Frederika of Greece, who plans to visit the University next month, is a charming woman and very much beloved by her people because of her tireless efforts to help them, according to Dr. and Mrs. S. Frederic Will.

Will, who is a professor of classical languages, and his wife have visited Greece three times. During a trip in 1951 Mrs. Will had the opportunity to meet and talk to the queen and her husband, King Paul, at a tea given by the American School of Classical Studies in Athens where Professor and Mrs. Will were students.

According to Mrs. Will, the king and queen, who come to the tea every year, were quite friendly and spoke very good English. Queen Frederika is charming and very attractive, while King Paul is tall and striking.

The royal family is a symbol to the Greek people as a "family monarchy" because with their several children they represent a loving, warm, happy group, Will said. The royal couple are both German in origin and the queen was born in Germany.

Because of their origin, Will also said, it was feared that the king and queen would not be popular among their subjects since Germany had captured Greece during the war.

But Queen Frederika has endeared herself to all Greek people through her active participation in the few charities in her country. She has personally aided in the distribution of food to her people during earthquakes, floods and other disasters.

She loves children and has brought many Greek children, who were kidnapped by Communists following the war, back from countries north of Greece. She has also established orphanages for children who were left homeless as a result of the war.

King Paul, who is considered quite intelligent, is an avid sports car fan and races many cars himself.

The Queen, who has indicated a desire to visit the University, is interested in the peaceful uses of atomic energy and is planning to talk to various experts in the fields of philosophy and nuclear physics during her visit.

We Can Beat Them Says Coach Toretta

"We can beat them!" Sever Toretta, line coach for the Nittany Lions, told the crowd of Lion supporters at last night's Penn State-Army pep rally.

"We beat Army in the first half of last year's game and in the second half of the 1956 game; this year we can beat them by putting two halves together," Toretta said.

Toretta was supported by his daughter, Patty, who let the crowd hear how the Lion will growl at Saturday's game. "He better growl, Dad, or we won't eat so good," was Patty's comment about the Lion.

A "pretty fair day" was the description used by Steve Garban, football captain, for last week's victory over Penn. Didn't we prove we could do it?"

Garban said the Penn State team is going to play the game with only one purpose: To beat Army!

Students, Frothy and the Nittany Lion were prompt and loud in their agreement with Edward Hintz, head football manager, that all victory parties should be celebrated at the University.

Hintz compared the pep rally with the one held before the Ohio State game two years ago. Toretta was the scout for both games, he said. Both teams promised tough competition; both were confident they could beat us.

Since the Lions upset Ohio State in 1956, he continued, there is no reason that we shouldn't do the same at West Point on Saturday.

The AFROTC band gave its enthusiastic support to the cheers and singing which followed.

Law Test Applications

Applications and sample tests are now available at the office of the Department of Political Science, 129 Sparks, for the next Law Placement Test for the Central Pennsylvania area to be given at the University Saturday morning, Nov. 8.

Requests for applications should be submitted by Oct. 11.

Most leading American law schools use the test as one factor in considering candidates for admission.
