Snow Removal To Be Tackled By New Plows

There may not be as many snow-bound students as usual this coming winter if Centre County receives the two rotary snow plows scheduled for the area.

According to John J. Kelmar, district engineer of the State Highway Department's Clearfield office, the two plows should be added to the snow removal program for the coming winter. The plows are capable of handling drifts up to four feet.

The gasoline-powered plows, pushed by trucks, can throw the snow well back from the roadside. Plows used last winter built up heavy mounds of snow along the roads. If more snow followed before the residue melted, there was no room to plow new snow.

Eighteen plows, to be distributed among the eight counties of the Clearfield district, will be allotted to localities where experience has shown the greatest need for such equipment.

Cadette Sworn In

Advanced AFROTC Goes Coed

Keeping up with the men in a man's world is no problem for one coed—she marches with them every Thursday afternoon during Common Hour.

Miss Beth Ann Boltz, junior in political science from State College, is a Cadette First Lieutenant in the Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps.

The only coed on campus in advanced ROTC, she was sworn into the Air Force Reserves on Tuesday.

Miss Boltz came to Penn State in her sophomore year after her father, SFC Gordon A. Boltz, instructor of military science and tactics, was transferred here.

She wanted to be in the service ever since her father was in the Army in World War II.

Miss Boltz is glad that the Air Force is the only women's ROTC on campus because she doesn't particularly care for "the Army's shade of green." She is very enthusiastic about the service. Her only complaint is "those horrid black oxfords we have to use to drill in." Sgt. Boltz said he wanted his daughter to become a member of the service and he is "very proud of her." He also commented that he can still pull rank on her because his position in the Army Reserves is a Captain.

The regular ROTC classes are required of Miss Boltz and the eight coeds who are in basic ROTC. This year she is taking courses in command, weather, and military law. She also marches at Common Hour and proctors a sophomore ROTC class.

Finnish Frosh Finds Students 'Carefree'

"American students everywhere seem so carefree and appear to be hurrying everywhere at once," observed Lenna Linni exchange student from Finland.

She is being sponsored here by Mortar Board, senior hat women's society.

Lenna was chosen from a large number of applicants from many foreign countries. She was selected on the basis of an application and one interview, which was judged by the Finnish Committee on Study and Training.

A pert, 19-year-old freshman in English composition, Lenna is from Helsinki, the capital and largest city of Finland.

She has three older sisters and is the first of her family to come to America. Although she's been here only three weeks, she's already been able to see major differences between American and Finnish universities.

"Since there are no college campuses, there is no need for bicycles or cars, and students own them in far less numbers than their American counterparts. And the American clothes are so pretty. Never have I seen girls so style conscious," she said.

"The Finns," said Lenna, "do not have the educational opportunities that Americans have. Only the first four years of school, which comprise the elementary grades, are free. In order to attend a secondary school one must pay tuition.

"There are only two universities in Finland for approximately four million people. These universities do not offer courses in music, engineering, business or art. However, there are special schools for each of these curriculums. Fraternities and sororities do not exist in Finnish schools."

Lenna is staying in McElwain Hall. As dormitories are non-existent in Finland she is rapidly finding out how much cigarette smoke, gossip and bull sessions the Finnish coeds are missing by not having this institution associated with their university life.

Zepp Heads Council For Chem-Phys

Twenty-one students in the College of Chemistry and Physics serve on their student governing body, the Chemistry-Physics Student Council.

The council is headed this year by Donald Zepp, senior in chemical engineering from York.

Other officers include Irving Klein, junior in pre-medicine from Bala Cynwyd, vice president, and Charles Davis, junior in physics from Harbor Creek, secretary-treasurer.

Council members are elected each spring through student voting held in the lobby of Osmond Laboratory. Three freshmen, six sophomores, nine juniors and three seniors are on the council. The three freshman representatives are elected in the fall and remain on the council until their junior year.

Each succeeding year three more students are elected to the council and remain members from the time of election until the end of their junior year. Then the juniors interested in council must run again for the three senior positions. Senior council officers are not included in the senior seats.

The activities of the council include an orientation week program, the Chemistry-Physics Open House held for high school students during the annual Science Fair and a banquet with the faculty.

The council is also in charge of publishing the Chem-Phys Newsletter.

The council maintains a blue-book file in the main library and evaluates courses within the college.
