"Army is tough no matter what kind of formation it uses," Engle said one day last week. "We'll have to prepare for anything and everything."

"They have terrific speed in Anderson and Dawkins and an excellent passer in Caldwell. But they also have a powerful fullback in (Harry) Walters and a big, tough line which averages 210 pounds."

Engle's assistant coaches who scouted Army in its rout over the Gamecocks agree 100 per cent with Engle.

"That Walters is a very strong and hard runner," end coach J T White said. "He's much better than (Vince) Barta, Army's fullback last year. And he's faster too."

"That line is bigger than ever," line coach Tor Toretta commented. "(Bob) Novagratz is the academy strong boy. He was very instrumental in our defeat last year."

Novagratz, who has been rated as one of the Point's all-time linemen by many sports writers, was the big star in last week's Carolina test, completing over 75 per cent of his offensive assignments and leading the line in tackles.

Novagratz is the left guard in Army's new unorthodox lineup, flanked by end Don Ursy and center Bill Rowe, both of whom are lettermen. The other side of the line finds Joe Vanderbush at guard, lettermen Maurice Hilliard and Ed Bagdonas at tackles, Bill Carpenter flanked in the "Jonesome" end slot.

Only fullback Pat Botula will be missing from the Penn State starting backfield which sparked Penn State's 43-0 win over Penn last week. Botula, the nation's fourth leading ground gainer with 194 yards in two games, is suffering from a badly sprained elbow injury and will be sidelined for at least three weeks.

Senior Andy Moconyi, a two-year letter winner at halfback, will take over Botula's vacant fullback slot. Moconyi had been on the shelf because of a knee injury during the first three weeks of the Lions' pre-season drills. But he returned to the lineup against Penn and rushed for 43 yards in 11 carries.

Dave Kasperian and Fran Paolone will flank Moconyi at the halves and Al Jacks will be at quarterback. Kasperian is second only to Botula in individual team ground gaining with 138 yards in 31 rushes for a 4.5 average per trip. Paolone has gained 62 yards in 17 carries (3.6 average) and has also caught two passes for 20 yards. Jacks, one of the East's leading passers last fall, is the Lions' aerialist with seven completions in 12 attempts (58 per cent completion average) for 47 yards.

Engle has made two changes in the Lion forward wall and both of the alterations are at ends. Maury Schleicher, who missed the Penn tilt because of a charley horse in his thigh, returns to his starting right end spot, and junior Norm Neff, a standout against the Quakers, moves up from the alternate unit replacing John Bozick.

The interior line, which was given the main credit for the Penn victory, remains intact with Andy Stynchula and Chuck Janerette at the tackles, Chuck Ruslavage and Bill Wehmer at the guards and Steve Garban at center.

The return of veteran regular Joe Bohart at tackle will add strength to this alignment. Bohart sat out the Penn fray because of sprained ankle but he will be available this afternoon—at least for limited duty.

Once again our Penn State prognosticators have consulted their ouija boards, crystal balls, and dart boards to come up with their selections for today's grid games.

Genial George French, who picked 13 out of the 15 games last week, and is presently the leading man in the predictors' circle, claims that there is foul play afoot on the part of his competitors. Someone bent all of his darts!

He claims that he'll be under a real handicap today. If there is any safety at all in numbers, he's right. He disagrees with the other prophets on only four games.

This week's coach, Joe Paterno, explains his picks by saying he picked Brown over Yale to be loyal. (He's a graduate of Eli and doesn't want to get into the bad graces of the alumni association there.)

We also checked into the methods of the other prophets to see how they made their picks. Here at last is the secret.

Lucky Lou Prato takes all the statistics he can find about the coeds at the schools involved and puts them into an IBM machine.

"Usually the IBM machine is too interested in the coed's statistics to give any answer on the teams," he says. "So I have to guess."

Magnificent Matt Mathews claims he too uses a mathematical formula to come up with his predictions. He takes the records from previous years, squares them, adds fifteen, divides by 40, and ends up with the wrong age of the coaches. He fails to tell us that he flunked arithmetic in high school and can't work the formula.

Our prognosticators agree on one thing out of this whole mess. They say this week's selection of teams was the hardest yet. (They say this no matter what happens!)

They figure that if they're wrong, they have the excuse that the selections were too hard. If they're right, they can say "I told you so."

Having divulged too many of their predicting techniques already, we give you the predictions:
