

Yanks Win Championship

home run by about two feet. The drive bounced off a padding high on the right field barrier.

Elston Howard fouled off one pitch and looked at a ball before he bounced a single over second base. Berra hustled home with the big winning run.

Andy Carey, hitless in 11 trips, smashed a single off Eddie Matthews' glove into short left before Bill Skowron hammered a 2-2 pitch far and away over the fence in the left center field for a 415-foot 3-run homer.

Burdette bowed his head, pawed at the dirt resignedly, and finally closed out the inning by striking out Tony Kubek.

Crandall's homer with two out in the sixth was the only hit off the Yanks' 21-game winner until Joe Adcock sliced a pinch single to left with two gone in the ninth. When Mickey Mantle gathered in Red Shoendienst's fly to center for the final out, the short reign of the Braves had ended.

The Yankees, who usually take victory in stride, gathered around Turley as he walked off the mound, pounding his back, pumping his hand and yelling congratulations. The man who was yelling the most was Casey Stengel whose seventh World Series victory ties him with Joe McCarthy among the managers of all time.

It was the greatest comeback in baseball since the 1925 Pittsburgh Pirates, after losing three out of four to Washington, closed with a rush to take three straight by beating Walter Johnson on a rain-soaked afternoon. No other club ever had overcome such a handicap in a best-of-seven series until the 1958 Yankees.

These Yankees were given up for dead, counted out beyond recall after they lost the first two games in Milwaukee.

Fans were saying this might have been the worst Yankee club ever to win an American League pennant.

Larsen's shutout in the third game eliminated any chance of a Milwaukee sweep but Warren Spahn's shutout put the Yankees down 3-1, and left them needing three straight.

Turley, knocked out in the first inning of the second game when the Braves scored seven big runs, came to the rescue in the fifth game with a five-hit shutout.

In Wednesday's sixth game, Turley had to come from the bullpen to bail out Ryne Duren when the fast-ball pitcher faltered in the 10th inning.

It was the Yanks' 18th victory in 24 series and their seventh in nine with Stengel at the helm.
