Riding Prof Tells Of Death Escape

A sudden escape from the Bolsheviks 40 years ago prevented Capt. Gergory A. Gagarin, assistant professor of physical education, from digging his own grave—and filling it.

Gagarin narrowly escaped death by firing squad in Russia in 1918.

Gagarin, now a riding instructor, was living at his family estate near Pskov in northern Russia after serving with the Czar's regiment in World War II.

In 1918 he was arrested in the town of Porchov by the Bolsheviks, for no apparent reason. Gagarin was kept in jail until the Pskov-area peasants—who regarded him highly because he had been able to sell their flax to the British government—petitioned the Bolsheviks for his release.

"It was then that the Bolsheviks apparently decided to get rid of me," Gagarin said. He and two cellmates were taken to a cemetery to dig their own graves before they faced the Bolshevik firing squad.

They were guarded by an army officer, and six soldiers, all heavily armed.

"I was young," Gagarin said, "and loved life so much I could not die without at least trying to escape." He bolted, took the guards by surprise and zigzagged down a side street under heavy fire.

His right hand was shattered by a bullet and he had been shot in the side. For six days he hid with peasants.

He made his way to Pskov, Kiev and then Odessa, where he joined the French army, which was fighting the Bolsheviks.

Students Seek Unused Tickets For 'Readings'

Members of the Artists Series committee have requested students who hold tickets to the John Gielgud Readings and find they can not use them, to give them to other students.

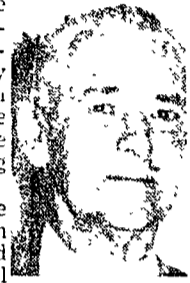

Tickets for Gielgud's performance, scheduled for 8:30 tonight in Schwab Auditorium, were completely distributed or sold out hours after they were made available.

Since the demand for tickets is so great, and since many people were turned away from the distribution center at the Hetzel Union desk, committee members urge passing on tickets which will not be used.

Gielgud's program tonight will consist of a group of selected Shakespearean readings entitled "Shakespeare's Ages of Man." They will cover most of Shakespeare's most famous works.

Gielgud, noted British actor and director, is best known to the American audience for his portrayal of Cassius in "Julius Caesar." Prior to the tour he is now making, he last appeared in the United States in 1950 in Christopher Fry's "The Lady's Not for Burning."

His appearance tonight marks the third program in the current Artists Series.
