

Two Student Councils Back Required ROTC

The compulsory ROTC issue was called a "political football" at Wednesday night's College of Business Administration Student Council meeting by senior member Thomas Brandeis.

"The Chemistry-Physics Council is trying to kick around an old issue. A pretty thorough study (of the ROTC issue) was made last year," council president James Meister stated.

Vincent Marino, junior representative, moved that council reaffirm its last year's stand in favor of the compulsory program. It did, 30 to 4.

Meister said the council's action on the subject would influence his vote if the issue is brought before All-University Cabinet.

He also announced that effective 8 a.m. today the front stairway in Boucke Building will be reserved for down traffic only.

"This is only being done on a trial basis and has been done to alleviate congested stairway conditions in Boucke. This will require the cooperation of every student in Boucke Building," Meister said.

In other action, Robert Drexler, president of Delta Sigma Pi, professional business fraternity, said he "would like to have council sponsor a book-of-the-year program in the business administration college."

"The main object . . . would be to bring more culture into the college and stimulate controversy about ideas," he said.

Meister asked him to investigate the matter further and report at a later council meeting.

President Meister also said council will decide at its Dec. 3 meeting, whether the newly organized Finance Club qualifies for a seat on council.

The Mineral Industries Student Council voted Wednesday night to have its president support compulsory ROTC if the issue should come before Cabinet.

Reasons given for supporting it were that it encourages a larger number of students to go on for commissions than would if it were not required; it is a necessary part of the military training system of the United States; and it gives the advanced ROTC students good practice in commanding the underclass compulsory ROTC students.

Some council members felt opposed to this view and thought that compulsory ROTC should not be supported. It was pointed out that there is nothing in the University's contract with the government which technically requires ROTC; compulsory ROTC is a waste of money on people who do not wish to participate; and the program is basically weak because of the poor selection of some instructors in the department.

A motion was made and defeated that the president of the council abstain from voting on the issue if it is considered at Cabinet. One council member said that he felt the whole topic of compulsory or voluntary ROTC is out of the hands of student government and can only be changed at the administration's discretion and therefore should not be brought to a vote.

Reports were also given by the faculty evaluation committee, the committee on non-technical electives and the committee formed to consider a possible open house in the College of Mineral Industries for next spring.

Approved Fraternities

All fraternities have been approved for the entertainment of women guests tonight and tomorrow night except Alpha Phi Alpha, Alpha Phi Delta and Phi Kappa Psi.

Pi Lambda Phi and Pi Sigma Upsilon have been approved for tomorrow night only.

Landscape Photographs Are Displayed in HUB

A traveling photographic exhibition, "Landscape Architecture Today," is now on display in the Hetzel Union card room.

The exhibition was planned by the California Redwood Association and is circulated by the Smithsonian Institute.

Term Paper Exchange Gets Cold Shoulder

How would you like to have your very own staff of research experts provide you with material for your college term paper? Everyone would.

But don't. Robert G. Bernreuter, special assistant to the president for student affairs, wrote a letter to a Missouri company which offered term papers.

The letter stated that any student at The Pennsylvania State University who submits for class credit a term paper given to him by this service will be subjected to discipline by the subcommittee on academic honesty.

Letters were sent, recently, to sororities and fraternities by this company concerning the supplying of completed term papers.

The service provides papers written by other students and instructors.

In exchange for the papers, students are to submit their own past term papers for circulation in the exchange.

The idea that the institute had in mind was relieving the student of the labor and time involved in the writing of such a paper.

The service offers more than one paper on the same subject and guarantees that the students' old papers will not be given to other students in the same university.

TIM Lounge--

Jack Kendall, Engineering-Architecture Student Council president, questioned the need for a separate lounge for the TIM students, and whether men would, as a whole, support the project.

Miss Donovan objected to the request that TIM as an organization have a separate lounge and urged that it be open to all town independent and commuting students.

Under the plans presented by TIM representatives, the lounge would be open to all University students when not in use by town students.

A 10-year study of "Videotown" by Cunningham & Walsh, an advertising agency, shows that of all major media, newspaper reading alone remains unchanged by the presence of TV in the home.

The Campus party candidate for freshman president said: "I would like to thank all those who supported me. I feel the election was run very well. Jay will make a good president. With the proper cooperation, he will be able to accomplish many things for the class of '62 and for the entire University."

Bentrem said: "I want to thank all of the people who voted for me. I will do my best to fulfill the obligations and responsibilities of my newly-elected office, and I will strive continually for a better Penn State."

"I would like to congratulate George Bentrem and only ask that he do a good job in representing the sophomore class," his opponent said. I would also like to thank the Campus party for allowing me to participate in these elections. My thanks go also to the student body for showing their interest in the elections.

"If I receive a job on the sophomore advisory board I will do my best to get through Cabinet all the planks that I have supported."

"I would like to first thank my fellow freshmen for choosing me as their vice president," Terry said. "I can only say that I will do my very best to prove to you that you have not made the wrong choice."

Fuhrman said: "In the hierarchy of each field of endeavor there are usually victors and losers. The winning or losing is relatively small in comparison to the knowledge and experience gained as a result of the individual's efforts and attempts to evolve himself to a higher plane than another."

"I would like to thank everyone who made my election possible—the University party for my nomination and the students for my election. I will do all in my power to fulfill the promises in our platform and give the student body their wishes in making a better Penn State University," Miss Barndt said.

Campus Breaks Rules—

(Continued from page one) as a whole. He also said that he was unaware that his party had already spent $148 for publicity.

Goldstein contended that he had received the cards from his father who had them printed by a friend at no expense. He did not consider this a part of party expenses. The posters were distributed in Atherton Hall and the Nittany area.

The committee held that any amount might be spent by a party through individual donations if there were no restrictions placed on expenditures. Since there were no explicit provisions in the code dealing with private expenditures the committee did not feel that it could harm a candidate for something that was the fault of the code.

Patricia Lenhardt, a committee member, said, "The Elections code is not strong enough; the committee cannot consider this a fault of the clique."

Elliott admitted that he became aware of these cards early last week but made no effort to contact committee members. "I did not try to find out from anyone about these cards," he stated.

At first Elliott denied seeing the cards until last night, but he then retracted his earlier statement.

A motion was made and passed by the committee to overlook the incident on the grounds that the case "was not serious enough to merit disqualification of the candidates."

In defending the exclusion of the picture cost from the expense account, Elliott said that the candidates paid for their own pictures and he saw no reason for including the item on the account. "I hate to see six candidates disqualified for a fault of mine," he also added.

This incident was also dropped because the committee did not think it serious enough for disqualification of the whole slate.
