International Students

Gray Cites Contribution

By PHYLLIS WESTCOTT
Foreign students contribute as much to the University as they receive, according to Dr. William H. Gray, director of international student affairs.

There are 234 international students and guests, representing 40 countries, on campus this year. Thirty-four are members of the staff or faculty. More than half of the students are graduate students, who are performing research and manning the laboratories.

The International Student Affairs office, in 108 Willard, provides a place for them to bring their problems, academic and personal.

The office is decorated with displays of gifts and the walls are hung with flags of the United Nations.

Before a foreign student is admitted to the University, he is screened by the Committee for Admission of International Students. He must have $2200 to tide him over the year, and must obtain a special passport visa. These students are usually the cream of the crop intellectually, and most of them are here on scholarships, Gray said.

They are asked to bring musical instruments, costumes and curios with them which might be of interest to the American people.

The office encourages the students to participate in normal campus activities, especially such organizations as the Inter-American Club and the Friends of India. Many of them are asked to lecture by groups throughout the state.

The Cosmopolitan Club puts out a monthly bulletin, the Cosmopolitan, edited entirely by the international students.

Another duty of the office is to arrange invitations for the international students to spend holidays, such as Thanksgiving and Christmas, in the homes of American families. Anyone interested in having a foreign student visit him should contact the office.

The office grew out of the work of the Committee of International Understanding in 1953.

Ten years ago there were 57 foreign students on campus. However, the University only ranks seventeenth in number of international students. Foreign students at the University of Michigan, for instance, number several thousand.

Gray feels that the international students contribute an air of universality to the campus. India, with 35 students, tops the list of countries represented. There are 23 Chinese students, 18 Japanese, 14 English and 13 Canadians. Eight students are enrolled under the Hungarian Student Assistance program.

The College of Mineral Industries, with 60 international students, enrolls the largest number. Approximately 37 are in the College of Agriculture, and the same number in Chemistry and Physics. Twenty-four are studying engineering and architecture.

'Clearing' Concerns Mental Sickness

By JEANETTE SAXE

A mentally sick woman goes back to her summer house in a clearing in the woods to find what has caused her unhappiness in the Players' production of Arthur Laurents' "A Clearing in The Woods," which will open at 8 p.m. tomorrow in Schwab Auditorium.

The play will also run Friday and Saturday.

While at her summer home, the heroine, Virginia, meets three girls, Jigee, Nora and Ginna, who are all similar to herself at various ages. She also meets Hazelmae, her girlhood friend. Through them she relives some of her youthful experiences.

Barney, her father, is lovable but addicted to the bottle and the golf course. Andy is her true love who returns to her and saves her sanity in the end. Pete is her ex-husband, a college BMOG who is very charming but little else. George is a composite of all the men with whom she has tried to find happiness. The Boy is her very first romance, who introduces her to spiked drinks.

In this play, Laurents has found a fairly new way to treat a neurotic woman. It is not the medical treatment but the theatrical treatment. He physically landscapes her troubled mind and puts into flesh her ugly memories.

Frank Neusbaum, professor of theatre arts, will direct the production, which requires very detailed preparation. Neusbaum had to find four actresses who resembled each other slightly, one of whom had to be a girl of 10 or 12 to play Jigee.

The girl he found is Louise Williams, 10, from State College. She is in the fifth grade at the Nittany Avenue School Annex. This is her first time on stage. Neusbaum discovered her through Dr. Walter Walters' Creative Dramatics for Children Group last summer. Walters is head of the Department of Theatre Arts.

Neusbaum is returning to stage direction after an absence of some years when he was working with the University's Motion Picture Service.

Sputnik III Will Appear To Campus Stargazers

Area stargazers can watch Sputnik III pass over Centre County tonight.

Sputnik III will be overhead at 7:30. It will be just west of the Zenith at 7:27 p.m. Thursday.

According to David C. Whitmarsh, head of the Operation Moonwatch team, the Russian earth satellite is blinking at about 15-second intervals as it tumbles end over end. The satellite is still easily sighted with the naked eye.

Tavern Group Asks for Laws

The Pennsylvania Tavern Association will support state legislation to provide for the prosecution of minors who enter taverns instead of tavern licensees.

Other legislative changes supported by the association include extending the closing time of taverns on Saturday from midnight to 2 a.m., permitting taverns to sell liquor by the bottle after state stores are closed and allowing a larger discount on purchases from the state stores.

The association also agreed to support legislation to permit the sale of a case of beer to take out, instead of the present limit of 12 bottles or cans, and to change the quota law so that the number of licenses granted will be determined on a county basis instead of the present community basis.

Science Prof Heads Seminar

Dr. Hans Neuberger, professor and head of the department of meteorology, recently served as chairman of the General Session on Atmospheric Physics and a sub-seminar on atmospheric electricity at the Users' Symposium held at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.

The symposium, sponsored jointly by the University of Michigan and the Bendix Aviation Corporation Systems Division, was concerned with the Air Force reconnaissance system and the uses of atmospheric data by military and non-military researchers obtained from a four-engine Boeing jet aircraft being equipped for reconnaissance at 50,000 feet.
