Forecaster Predicts Snow Tomorrow

More than two inches will fall before the weekend is over, according to Joel Myers, Collegian forecaster.

The cold wave which has kept temperatures below 25 degrees for the past week will continue for several more days. Air descending from the Arctic is the reason for the low temperatures, Myers said.

Students may expect to see snow flurries today and to come in contact with 18-degree gusts. The temperature will dip to five degrees tonight.

Yesterday's temperature ranged between 9 and 12 degrees, which was a slight rise over Thursday.

Southern parts of the nation are experiencing unusual changes in the weather. The Carolinas and Virginia have had as much as 15 inches of snow. An Atlantic storm, which is causing the abnormal weather, influenced temperatures to drop below freezing yesterday as far south as northern Florida and snow to fall over parts of Alabama and Georgia.

In addition to a new 4-inch snow which covered Oswego, N.Y., Thursday the city experienced a snowfall of six and one-half feet.

The week long series of wintry storms have ranged from the Continental Divide to the Atlantic.

In 1922, the first balloon tires were introduced on U.S. cars. The tire and tube industry in 1957 increased its investment in newspaper advertising by 39 per cent over the previous year.
