 other universities.
 Another area which Walker cited for necessary expansion is educational television broadcasting. Twenty different courses are now being televised as a means of keeping the quality of instruction high as the enrollment rises.

through the work of commissions consisting of educators from all colleges and universities in the state. By serving on these commissions the University becomes linked with the educational needs of the Commonwealth, Walker said.

A state-wide hookup connecting all the campuses and centers with the main campus is being planned for the near future so that students off-campus might participate in the University's classes.

Walker also told of the close relationship which exists between the University and the Commonwealth. This is made possible
