

Farmer Optimists Answer 'Beatniks'

Home-grown optimism is the answer of the farm-bred students to the "beat" generation of the city slickers.

Pessimism and cynicism, trademarks of the beatniks, don't win any popularity contests in the rural districts which are relatively unimpressed by these "modern" attitudes.

This report was compiled from a survey conducted by rural sociologists at the University.

This survey, begun in 1947, traced the lives of 2810 rural students from the beginning of their sophomore year in high school until the present. The original purpose of this survey was to study the migration of the rural youth to the cities to gain occupational advancement.

The results of the survey show that about one-third of the students polled have moved to urban areas, sixty per cent have remained in the same county, and only twenty per cent have left Pennsylvania.

This migration from farm to factory has occurred because of the students' desire for independence, according to Dr. Roy C. Buck, associate professor of rural sociology and director of the survey.

They tend to move to areas of the country where economic and social conditions are better than those in their home area. Some of the migration has occurred because of offers of better jobs and high salaries.

This surge of farm youth to the cities has removed the surplus of farm laborers in the surveyed areas, with the younger farmers replacing the older ones at an equal rate.

According to the results of the survey, most farm youths who have made the move to the city tend to obtain operative jobs running factory machinery. The rest become craftsmen or professionals.

The largest number of the girls from farm communities seek employment in clerical fields. Some secure operative jobs in factories, while the rest enter the professional field.

The variance in salaries is wide with the boys who earn $88 a week, as opposed to only $50 a week for the girls.

Books taken in totaled 18,641 which was 4000 more than in any other semester.

Students are reminded to have their blue receipts with them when they come for refunds.

From Here--

(Continued from page four) eliminate forest fires. A new tobacco process would be used to extinguish the cigarette butt soon after it is discarded. Who said it's what up front that counts!

Evidently the bakers' union quashed this invention: It was a machine called the "auto-plane" that would convert harvested grain directly into bread without making flour or carrying out the complicated processes of breadmaking.

Wonder if our kids will get as much a kick out of reading of the gimmicks we have come up with in 1959?
