Open Board To Be Aired By Trustees

Respect Own Beliefs, Dr. Shapiro Advises

A Daily Collegian request for open meetings will be on the agenda for the next session of the Board of Trustees, scheduled for June 6.

The request was read at the Jan. 23 meeting of the board. But it was not acted upon then because it had not been received in time for the agenda, according to C. S. Wyand, assistant secretary of the board.

In a letter this week to Collegian Editor Robert Franklin, Wyand said, "your proposal will be submitted to the Board of Trustees at the next meeting, now scheduled for June 6, 1959."

Board President James B. Long and Gov. David L. Lawrence, a member of the board, both have come out in favor of opening the trustees meetings to the public and the press. State Rep. Joseph P. Ujobai (R-Chester) and House Majority Leader Stephen McCann (D-Greene) last week expressed support for possible state legislation to open the meetings.

Franklin's letter to the board specifically asked open meetings of all sessions of the full board and of the executive committee. It said:

"I am certain that no group realizes more fully than the Penn State Board of Trustees the tremendous problems the University faces in the next 12 years.

"To meet these problems, Penn State must make the best possible use of every resource at its command. These resources should include the utmost cooperation and understanding of Penn State alumni, faculty, staff and students, and of the people of Pennsylvania.

"I am sure you feel, as we do, that these groups should be interested in and fully informed on Penn State's educational and physical development, its finances, needs and overall plans—in short, in the policies determined by the Board of Trustees.

"We firmly believe that full press coverage of board meetings will stimulate an increased public interest in and understanding of the University which is vital to Penn State's future.

Rushing Rules Intact For New Freshmen

The Interfraternity Council Board of Control yesterday warned fraternity members that the deferred rushing rules which applied the first semester will be intact for new students this semester.

Board Chairman Ronald Siders said all the rules which applied to first semester students in the fall will apply to first semester students even though fraternity rushing is being held for the second semester men.

Fraternity men will not be permitted to enter the men's residence halls from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. for any reason, Siders said. This includes men who wish to rush second semester students.

Fraternity men will be permitted in the men's units from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. to rush both first and second semester and upperclass students. No more than one fraternity man at a time may visit a first semester student, however.

First semester students are prohibited from visiting the premises or entering any fraternity, Siders said.

Siders also said the board has ruled that all advertising concerning fraternity parties or mixers must specifically invite only students second semester and above.

The board also outlined the proper procedure for registering and tagging freshmen Friday and Saturday nights. The freshmen must be identified in some way, Siders said, and no freshman under 21 years of age may be served or drink any intoxicating beverages.

If freshmen sign a guest register and mark their semester standing, the fraternity is absolved of blame if the student has falsified his semester standing in order to drink alcoholic beverages, Siders said. Proper "door duty" must also be maintained to greet guests on both Friday and Saturday, he said.

Society," the national director of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations, said that the members of each faith must have self-respect for their own religion to live in a true Judeo-Christian society.

"The beauty of religion is that it is something within you which can illuminate problems," he said. "It is not a matter of the church alone."

Shapiro advised that it is time to re-establish and take action on what we individually believe.

In America, he said, most groups spend time trying to prove they are not "different." This has resulted from a general hostility to newcomers in the 19th century.

"It is not correct to say that absorption into our cultures has resulted from great hospitality," he said. As a result, immigrants were eager to "throw off their differences to gain acceptance."

This is a natural process, he said, for "when people are very dissimilar they seek to be alike."

He asked, however, have Americans not become so much alike that they should not depart a little from this likeness so that each can stand more for his group's rights.

He said that Americans have become separated from the cultural differences of which they Cordier's lecture is entitled "The United Nations in a Revolutionary World," and is co-sponsored by the Graduate School Lecture Series and the Committee on International Understanding.

Since his appointment to that position in 1946, Cordier has been responsible for coordinating United Nations activities and programs, including the organization and direction of the General Assembly and headquarters direction of political missions.

Cordier, who has been principal adviser to all the presidents of the United Nations General Assembly, was graduated from Manchester College, North Manchester, Ind., and he received master of arts and doctor of philosophy degrees from the University of Chicago. He also studied for a year at the Graduate Institute of International Studies in Geneva.

From 1927 to 1944 he served as chairman of the department of history and political science at Manchester College and from 1929 to 1944 he served as lecturer in social sciences for the Extension Division of Indiana University.

Between 1928 and 1941 he traveled extensively, making surveys of the crises in the Sudentenland, Danzig, and the Chaco.

After leaving Manchester College in 1944, Cordier served for two years in the State Department as an expert on international security.

As technical expert on the U.S. Delegation at the United Nations Conference in San Francisco, he was adviser to the late Sen. Vandenberg.

In 1945, he was sent to London by the State Department to assist in setting up the United Nations. In June he was designated as special representative of the secretary-general to Mount Scopus.

Boy's Body Found After 2-Day Hunt

The 49-hour search for the body of Terry Boal ended yesterday on a muddy, half-submerged island in Bald Eagle Creek.

Lee Fetzer Jr., of Bellefonte, one of three in a motor boat combing the creek, came upon the body at 2:20 p.m. yesterday on the island at the Nevin Pighetti farm, 2½ miles northeast of Milesburg, near Curtin.

The discovery ended the extensive search efforts begun when the 5-year-old youth was swept into a storm sewer in Bellefonte shortly after noon on Tuesday.

Searchers yesterday resorted to using grappling hooks to probe the waters of Spring Creek at McCoy Dam, below Bellefonte. Firemen, Explorer Scouts and other volunteers—more than 100 persons—participated in the widespread search, policing virtually every foot of Spring and Bald Eagle Creeks.

It was the party led by Milesburg Fire Chief Phillip L. Wallace that found the body about 7 miles north of Bellefonte. The three men in the party were combing that area of the creek in a motor boat equipped with grappling hooks when Fetzer sighted the boy.

The body was taken to Centre County Hospital in the Logan Fire Co. ambulance.

Cabinet Drops CPA

By DENNY MALICK

The Central Promotion Agency will have to become sanctioned by the University Senate Subcommittee on Organizations if it wishes to operate in the future.

All-University Cabinet last night eliminated the agency as one of its standing committees, thus making it an independent organization which requires Senate recognition to operate.

After a Student Encampment recommendation last semester,

CPA Director Emanuel Greenberg drew up a constitution without which the agency had operated for its five years of existence.

Greenberg, presenting the constitution to Cabinet last night, was unable to answer many of the questions from Cabinet members as to the value of the agency.

Greenberg said that lack of organization has caused much inefficiency in CPA's operation. He felt that the constitution would give the director and his staff more power to make it more successful.

Greenberg said CPA did "about" $300 business last year.

Jack Kendall, Engineering Student Council president, who moved that the agency be disassociated from Cabinet, said it would have more prestige as an independent group.

Kendall questioned the value of Cabinet backing for CPA since with its support only a small amount of business was being done.

Ross Lehman, one of CPA's three faculty advisers, said he didn't think the agency would ever be successful. He pointed out that most of the larger organizations never use the service since people within their own groups handle the same work.
